New Farm Bill Seeks Inflation Of Three Billion

Leaders Will Fight Drive in Congress

But Advocates Claim Measure Already Has Wide Backing.

By Robert C. Albright.

A new force for monetary expansion moved into the Congressional picture yesterday, as Senator Lynn J. Frazier, and Representative William Lemke, (Republicans), of North Dakota, redrafted their sweeping farm refinancing bill, providing $3,000,000,000 inflation.

They will introduce their revamped measure simultaneously in House and Senate on the day Congress opens. On the same day, various proposals for bonus cash payment, with and without inflation, will be offered by veterans' contingents. Within a month a silver expansion program will be dropped into the bill hopper.

Leaders Act to Block Drive.

Congressional leaders on both sides of the Capitol already are moving to stop this three-pronged inflation drive, many features of which last session made vast inroads on the House organization, which swept the bonus to passage and voted consideration of the Frazier-Lemke measure, via the petition route.

Following extended conferences yesterday, where minor changes were written into the farm mortgage measure, Frazier and Lemke announced the backing of 22 State Legislatures, and the lower chambers in New York and New Jersey. Lemke claims the House will pass it.

3 Billion Expansion Sought.

The measure, far-reaching in its inflation possibilities, proposes to liquidate and refinance agricultural indebtedness, through the Federal farm-loan system, the Federal Reserve banking system, and a proposed new "Board of Agriculture." Mortgages would be liquidated and refinanced under a 47-year amortization plan, at 1½ per cent interest and 1½ per cent principal. Funds would be furnished through sale of farm loan bonds, part of which the Federal Reserve board would purchase by issue of new money.

Originally, the bill proposed checking inflation potentialities when money in circulation reached $75 per capita, but under yesterday's redraft, a flat $3,000,000,000 expansion limitation was written into the bill. Another change made by Frazier and Lemke yesterday would convert net interest paid or profits made into a permanent revolving fund for refinancing farm mortgages.

Inflation Plans Advanced.

Meanwhile, inflation plans moved forward apace on silver and bonus fronts. Senator Burton K. Wheeler, of Montana, leader of Senate silverites, said the silver bloc will be called into conference before Congress meets on January 3. He already has drafted a 16-to-1 remonetization bill, and efforts will be made to get unity of opinion from Congressional silver advocates. Aroused by reports that the Treasury's silver purchase program is "dragging," Wheeler said the group will demand an "accounting."

As Representative Wright Patman, of Texas, disclosed the terms of his bonus cash payment bill, it became known that a number of other Representatives and Senators have drawn bonus measures, some of them proposing a basis of "compromise" between the veterans' bloc and the Administration. Veterans' groups on one hand, and Government spokesmen on the other, insist there will be no "compromise," but a number of proposals have been put forward tentatively for paying the bonus on a strictly relief basis.

The Patman bill would leave the question of inflation up to the Treasury, the Texan insists, providing authority to withdraw Federal Reserve notes in an amount equivalent to new money paid out in bonus to veterans.

Citroen Auto Factory Goes in Receivership

Paris, Dec. 21 (AP).—The Great Citroen Automobile Works, capitalized at 400,000,000 francs ($26,000,000), was thrown into receivership today in an effort to keep the busy plant operating.

Premier Pierre-Entienne Flandin, rejecting Socialist proposals that the government operate the plant until its financial tangle is unraveled, told the chamber he expected receivership "will avert the bankruptcy and ruin of an enterprise whose business amounts to approximately $66,000,000."

Baby Wins Fight for Life.

Seattle, Dec. 21 (AP).—The baby daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Albert Glaser, born Wednesday, used her own tiny lungs for breating tonight. Previously for 48 hours city firemen had kept a spark of life in the little body by feeding air to the infant with inhalators.

Mystery Grips 'Flying Hotel's' Crash in Desert

Dutch, British Start Probe of Tragedy Costing 7 Lives.

Bagdad, Dec. 21 (AP).—A charred pile of debris in the Syrian desert held the secret tonight of the disaster which befell the mammoth Dutch airplane Uiver and its seven occupants.

A scouting plane of the Royal Air Force found the wreckage where it had crashed, apparently in a violent thunderstorm which swept the district two nights ago.

The bodies of the victims were taken to Rutbah Wells by ambulance from the scene of the tragedy. Dutch officials were en route here from Amsterdam to cooperate with British officials in an attempt to unravel the mystery of the airliner's destruction.

The Uiver, nicknamed the "Flying Hotel" because of its luxurious accommodations, was the pride of the Dutch commercial air fleet. It was built in the United States.

Exactly a month ago the plane won the handicap prize in the England-to-Melbourne Air Derby. At the time it crashed in the desert

Bardo Denies Parley Asked Federal Dole

Chides Critics 'for Failing to Read' Program of Industry.

By Felix Bruner.

C. L. Bardo, president of the National Association of Manufacturers and a member of the committee which drafted the business recovery program at White Sulphur Springs, yesterday denied that the plaform recommended the dole.

Referring to critical statements of Harry L. Hopkins, Federal relief administrator, and others, Bardo said:

"The criticism of the platform has been based largely upon things which it does not contain. The dole was not recommended in this program. Rewarded work was. Return of relief functions to local government 'as soon as practicable,' was urged and this has been set forth repeatedly as the attitude of the Administration."

Chides Program's Critics.

After reciting a part of the section of the platform concerning relief, Bardo said he believed critics of the platform who accuse business men of not dealing sympathetically with the unemployed "spoke without reading that which they criticized." He expressed the belief that President Roosevelt would consider the program "in the spirit in which it was drafted as a cooperative effort to help develop sound measures for recovery."

Concluding, Bardo said: "The facts are that during the transitional period of returning the relief load to the States as recommended by the conference, Federal relief expenses, excepting CWA, which has been abandoned, could be continued at the rate of the fiscal year of 1934, and still balance the budget approximately in 1936 and fully balance it in June, 1937."

The word "dole" does not appear in the platform, but in at least two places there is expressed opposition to "made work" relief. There is a statement to the effect that "the creation of public works for the purpose of providing relief invites waste and definitely defers a balanced budget."

Expenditures for relief, which Bardo said in his statement could be

Martin Insull Is Acquitted; Hugs Samuel

Third Effort to Place Blame for Empire's Collapse Fails.

Jurors Nearly Come to Blows; New Trial Date Is Set.

Prosecutors had failed for the third time to fix criminal responsibility for the collapse of the huge Insull power empire.

The jury filed into the crowded court chamber after 6 hours and 45 minutes of deliberation, and announced that they found the defendant not guilty of stealing $344,720 from the Middle West Utilities Co. he headed, to carry on his private stock market operations.

Martin dropped his customary cloak of dignity. He scrambled over the rail to the jury box to shake hands with each of the 12 men.

Hugs His Brother.

He hugged his brother and mentor, Samuel Insull, sr.—the power potentate who took him from a laborer's job and made him president of the $2,000,000,000 Middle West concern. Tears trickled from Samuel's eyes.

Samuel and his son, Samuel, jr., and 16 co-defendants were freed in Federal Court on November 24 on charges of fraudulent use of the mail in pushing the sale of their securities at a time when the utility domain was crumpling. Marshall E. Sampsell, former president of the Central Illinois Public Service Co. and first of the Insull chieftains to go on trial, was acquitted last August in a State court on an embezzlement count.

Foreman John Burks reported after the verdict today that the jurors had deliberated quietly, but another pair of jurors stated:

"Sometimes we almost came to blows."

Two for Conviction.

Two members voted to convict the 65-year-old defendant until the last ballot.

"I am more than delighted that my brother was acquitted," Samuel said after he had regained his composure.

John E. Northup, one of the defense counsel, who had contended Insull had authority to use Middle West Co. funds to supplant Insull securities in his market account and that a disastrous slump in quotations would have occurred had Martin dumped them on the market, declared:

"I am pleased. The verdict shows that the American people can consider such intricate problems with a dispassionate mind even though many prejudices exist which might cloud the issue. The jury demonstrated that justice will prevail."

But the 17 days of court proceedings did not fully clear Martin Insull. Judge Cornelius J. Harrington, of the Criminal Court, called counsel to the bench a short time after the verdict and set January 15 for Martin's trial on a second charge of embezzlement. He has been indicted for allegedly abstracting another $20,000 from Middle West about the time the larger withdrawal took place in 1931.

May Face Deportation.

Should he defeat this case, deportation proceedings loom as a possibility. When Middle West Utilities Co. went into receivership in April, 1932, Martin lost his presidency and with it, he claimed, virtually all of his fortune. He went to Canada. After 17 months and protracted international procedure, he was brought back under guard.

In the event he clears himself of all criminal charges, he could be turned over to immigration authorities here for deportation to England. Although Martin has resided in the United States since he was 18, he has remained a British subject.

Lloyd George Urges Start of 'New Deal'

London, Dec. 21 (AP).—David Lloyd George, impatient exponent of a "New Deal" for Britain today estimated the nation's unemployed at 2,500,000 and asked the House of Commons, "What are you waiting for?"

Santa Crosses Raging Seas To the Lighthouse Children

Mount Desert Light, Me., Dec. 21 (AP).—December seas may batter at Maine's lonely off-shore lighthouse stations, but the spirit of Christmas manages to reach those bleak outposts.

Lighthouse children and adults with them are not forgotten by that rosy-cheeked person who slides down chimneys of mainland homes with a big Christmas pack.

However, preparations for Santa's visit to lighthouses are not so easily made as those ashore. They entail work, often danger, for someone.

Saint Nick, or his coastguard aids, must cross a 22-mile stretch of rough and open sea to prepare for the Christmas of little Shirley York, 10, and her brother, Wilbur, 9, marooned here since October with their parents, Mr. and Mrs. George W. York, and an assistant lighthouse keeper. The children, nevertheless, will not miss the gayety of the Yuletide.

Their home is on this stark, bare 10-acre ledge, a dwelling, the tall beacon and a vista of the ocean. But already Christmas things are beginning to gather; mysterious packages, supplies for the Yuletide table, a bushy fir tree awaiting the decorator—all brought by coast guardsmen from the Bass Harbor station on the southern tip of Mount Desert island.

At night the ceaseless watch over the light itself must be maintained, but in the dwelling a radio may bring music from some city jubilee; or the telephone, stretching by submarine cable to the Bass Harbor station, may bring the greetings of relatives.

Numbers Raid Staged In Drive on Jimmy's

8 Suspects Seized by D. C. Police Face Lottery Charges; LaFontaine's Is Idle as Patrons From Capital Undergo Questioning.

Eight men suspected of being connected with the "numbers" game department of Jimmy LaFontaine's gambling house were arrested by Washington police yesterday.

After being paraded before the line-up at the Detective Bureau last night, they were charged with "operating a lottery."

Meantime, those employed in other departments of Jimmy's place—the dice, poker and roulette departments—appeared to be idle, the "campaign of harassment" inaugurated by the Washington police apparently having frightened away business.

Eight Arrested.

Of the eight men arrested and charged with "operating a lottery," three were found to have numbers slips in their possession. The remaining five were suspected of being contact men who would meet runners, take over their slips, and carry them into Jimmy's.

The prisoners, all of whom were arrested by police assigned to "harass" Jimmy's place, were booked as follows:

Earl Day, 20, 2600 block Seventeenth street northwest; Guy Albert Spigone, 30, 200 block K street northeast; Frank Chatalamo, 42, 700 block Fifth street northwest; Adrian D. Knott, 32, 100 block Tenth street southeast; Leo Jackson Long, 49, of Colmar Manor, Md.; Patric Henry Spaulding, 31, 1300 block South Capitol street; Harry Lee Spalding, 900 block Twelfth street southeast, and James E. Glenn, colored, 43, 400 block of P street nrothwest.

Late last night the men were released on $500 bond each.

First Move in Drive.

With one exception, this is the first time a lottery charge has been placed against accused numbers operators. If the grand jury brings in an indictment, Little's men plan a determined drive against the operators, who have been encouraged because there is no specific statute against the numbers game.

At an hour when ordinarily it would be crowded, Jimmy's place seemed deserted last night. Actually there was nothing to prevent customers from entering the 30-acre reserve from the Maryland side, but apparently the activity of Washington policemen on the District side, together with the attendant publicity, had frightened away the devotees of the dice, card and roulette tables.

Attracts Many Curious.

Hundreds of curious drove out Bladensburg road in the course of the day to see what had happened to the much-publicized green fence.

They saw a gaping hole, 90 feet wide, in that part of the fence on the District section of the LaFontaine estate. This had been torn down the day before by employes of the District highway department.

The 90-foot strip was condemned and purchased by the District government two years ago, and is to become an extension of Eastern avenue.

The onlookers also saw what had happened to the dismantled fence. Employes of LaFontaine had reclaimed it and erected it in such a way at right angles to the old fence that it once again screened Jimmy's place from the public's gaze.

Entrance Guarded.

Two District policemen were on guard last night at the District entrance to the gambling house. Their task was to question every motorist who used the entrance, this being part of the "campaign of embarrassment." Few tried to get by them.

One of those who did was arrested as a numbers game runner. Two others were picked up on a tip that they were headed for Jimmy's, and the other four were arrested at a gasoline station in the neighborhood.

Some of the natives of Prince Georges County, Md., within which

Reserve Unit Delays Filling Agents' Posts

Districts' Officials Will Not Be Named Pending Legislation Moves.

By Franklyn Waltman, Jr.

Unusual significance was attached yesterday to the revelation that the Federal Reserve Board has decided not to fill at this time vacancies in the post of Reserve agent in several of the Reserve districts. The Reserve agent in each district serves also as chairman of the directors of the respective banks.

The board's decision was understood to be inspired by uncertainty over changes that will be made in the banking structure of the Nation by Congress this winter and the feeling that the type of men the board wishes would be reluctant to accept appointments unless they could be assured of a degree of permanency.

New Legislation Proposed.

At the same time it became known that a movement is on foot for the Federal Reserve Board, the Treasury and the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation to make joint recommendations to Congress for legislation. Previously the Reserve Board always has acted independently of the Treasury in such matters, even opposing Treasury proposals in some cases.

Some observers saw in these developments indications that the Administration was preparing legislation for centralizing in the Reserve Board greater authority over that banking system. One suggestion was that the posts of Reserve agents and Reserve Bank governors might be merged into one office, with the appointive power resting in the Reserve Board.

Centralization Indicated.

The Reserve bank governors are now elected by the Reserve bank directors, the majority of whom represent the member banks in each district. Consequently it has been contended that the Reserve bank governors have been more responsive to the wishes of the private banks than to the desires and aims of the Reserve board and the Treasury. The Reserve agent or chairman of the directors of each bank is appointed by and is responsible to the Reserve Board.

Subjecting the 12 Reserve bank governors to appointment to the Reserve Board is held to be a step toward a centralized banking structure and a departure from the ideas of the framers of the Reserve act who insisted on a regional system.

It is understood that while this subject is receiving serious consideration, a final decision has not yet been made, but it was decided best to keep the way open for any changes in the present law by leaving for the present the reserve agent vacancies which exist at Kansas City, Cleveland and San Francisco banks.

Some weeks ago the Reserve Board, prior to the appointment of Governor Marriner S. Eccles, offered the position of reserve agent

Arms Trade Sale to U. S. Hit by Army

Approves Licensing of Industry, However, Senators Told.

Baruch Urges Nation to Accept Tin as Debt Payment.

(Associated Press.)

The War Department flatly opposed governmental ownership of the arms and ammunition industry yesterday in a statement submitted to the Senate Munitions Committee, several of whose members have proposed such a course.

"Such a policy would fail in war and therefore does not appear logical in peace," the department said, asserting nevertheless that it "does not oppose in any way a program of licensing the munitions industry."

The statement was presented by Lieut. Col. C. T. Harris as the committee brought its hearings to a holiday recess, after a dissection of plans for industrial mobilization in the next war which brought out that abrogation of section 7 (a) of the national industrial recovery act, which sets forth labor's right to collective bargaining, was in contemplation for the next conflict.

Army Men with NRA.

William Green, president of the American Federation of Labor, immediately commented elsewhere that "labor certainly would resist with all the power it possesses scrapping 7 (a), war or no war."

It was learned also that 21 Army officers are serving with NRA, so war-plan makers may be kept closely posted on developments there.

During the day, Bernard M. Baruch, chairman of the old war industries board, told the House Foreign Affairs Committee of the difficulty and importance of obtaining tin in time of war, and recommended that the Government buy thousands of tons and store it away, "just as it would invest in a battleship."

Chairman McReynolds (Democrat), Tennessee, suggested that the United States accept tin in payment on war debts and Baruch agreed, saying:

"By taking the tin for the debts, I think we would be helping things."

Heads War-Profit Group.

The President has named Baruch chairman of a new group to study proposals for taking the profit out of war.

Senator Nye said the War Department's challenge to nationalization could be "shot full of holes" by facts already developed and those ready to be presented to the committee.

It was clear, he said, that "the War Department has not made anything resembling a thorough and impartial study of the issue."

Harris contended that nationalization of the munitions industry would double the cost of national defense.

Defending its aid to munitions makers, the department said the American industry must be depended upon to produce most of the munitions in time of war.

Harris would neither deny nor agree that collective bargaining

Ballou Announces He Won't Accept St. Lawrence Post

Announcement was made officially yesterday by Dr. Frank W. Ballou, for the last 15 years superintendent of District schools, that he has "withdrawn his name from further consideration for the presidency of St. Lawrence University."

Dr. Ballou reached his decision after several months consideration. Some time ago he informed the Board of Education he had been asked if he would accept an offer to become head of St. Lawrence, which is located in Canton, N. Y.

No explanation or amplification was contained in Dr. Ballou's announcement, which came in the form of a memorandum to the press.

'Daffy' Dean Acquires a Bride, 'Dizzy' Intrudes on Honeymoon

Bond, Miss., Dec. 21 (AP).—The Dizzy, Daffy, but Dazzling Deans and their missuses were honeymooning here tonight.

It was Daffy Dean who married, you know, but Mr. and Mrs. Dizzy are along on the honeymoon, too, and, as usual, Dizzy did a bit of talking.

He was still acting as chief counselor and adviser to his "baby" brother and bridegroom of the day, but it seemed likely that the new Mrs. Dean might have a thing or two to say about the Daf and his doings from now on. But tonight the Dean household was quite obviously "tickled pink" over everything in general.

The rural surroundings of this small pastoral community, which is only a flag stop on the railroad, seemed the ideal setting for the Dean honeymoon, with nothing but the moo-ing of the cows, or the occasional chant of a dusky farm hand to disturb the bliss that is a honeymooner's due.

Bond is the ancestral home of the bride, who until yesterday was Miss Dorothy Sandusky, of Russellville, Ark. The bride's relatives are among the pioneer settlers of this community.

In Mobile today, the "Diz" gave his fraternal blessings to the marriage, but saved a few blessings for himself. En route here to join his brother and sister-in-law, Dizzy said the marriage was "O. K. by me." Dizzy thinks he and Paul can win more games next year for the Cards than they did this season, which is a right good assignment even for the Deans.

New Naval Pact Is Hope as U. S. Quiets War Talk

Gay Christmas In White House For Roosevelts

The President Prepares for Week-End of Work and Relaxation.

The White House yesterday acquired all the attributes of a gay Christmas as President Roosevelt settled down for a week-end of alternate work and relaxation with members of his family, now gathering for the holidays.

Already his annual message to Congress is three-fourths finished, Mr. Roosevelt disclosed, adding that he would devote much of his time to completing it and to reading a batch of reports still awaiting his attention.

Original plans for a radio report to the Nation, tentatively set for Sunday night, have been dropped. But the Presidential voice will go on the air Christmas Eve, when he speaks at the community tree in Lafayette Park.

First Yuletide sign to appear at the White House came when workmen placed four Christmas trees, trimmed with colored lights, on the front portico. Inside, at one end of the east room, a 25-foot Christmas tree was set up and decorated

France Ready To Scrap Pact If Japan Won't

Paris, Dec. 21 (AP).—France tonight was ready to announce that, as far as she is concerned, the Washington Naval Treaty expires at the end of 1936.

An official announcement, however, denied that the government has any intention of joining Japan in formally denouncing the pact.

As Francois Pietri, minister of the navy, termed the pact "intolerable for France," high French quarters pointed out that the government, under the parliamentary ratification of the treaty in 1923, stands pledged to denounce it if necessary to insure France's freedom of action at its expiration.

A secret joint session of the Chamber of Deputies foreign affairs and naval committees decided denunciation was unnecessary in view of Japan's intended action, it was understood, but should Japan fail to abrogate the pact, the Paris government would be virtually forced to do so to assure its expiration in 1936.

Ready to Act.

In any event it was understood the government formally would notify the other four signatories that she considers the treaty void after 1936.

The official announcement, issued after the committee meeting, said "the report that the French government intends to denounce the Washington Treaty shortly is devoid of all foundation."

(Emperor Hirohito today formally affixed the imperial seal to the documents concerning Japan's abrogation of the treaty, and there remained only the formality of communicating them to the other four signatories, the United States, Great Britain, France and Italy. This was expected shortly.)

Oppose Parity Plan.

"We are agreed," Pietri told the legislators, "in declaring publicly soon that France considers the Washington Treaty as ended in 1936

'Deriding' Tone Is Flayed Here

Congressmen and Others Cautioned to Temper Naval Statements.

By Elliott Thurston.

The official attitude of the United States, as authoritatively expressed yesterday, is one of disappointment over the unsuccessful naval conversations at London, but of hope that another agreement can be reached in the next two years before the existing naval treaties expire. Coupled with this statement was a warning that all Americans, particularly members of Congress, should avoid adopting a belligerent tone.

This Government, it was said, while regretting the lack of success at London, will continue to hope for a renewal of the limitation of naval armaments. Meanwhile, it was stated, all Americans should bear in mind that we have done nothing toward adopting an antagonistic or hostile attitude. Our position has been that every nation is entitled to relative security. We believe, it was stated, that the two previous treaties—the Washington Treaty, limiting battleships, and the London Treaty, covering cruisers and other auxiliary craft—gave every nation relative security, which has continued for a good many years, from 1921 to the present time. This Government desires a continuance of relative security.

It was emphasized that any time any American, particularly a member of Congress, adopts a belligerent attitude it is an invitation to still more and more belligerency. Regret was expressed over what some members of Congress and others have recently said. The more they talk, it was said, the more we are going to have repercussions from other countries.

Avoid Angering Others.

Our attitude, according to the official view, should be to strive to reach agreement on the basis of a continuance of security, and to avoid talking about hypothetical situations; we should avoid antagonizing anyone. There are still two years within which to seek another agreement or treaty.

As for whether the Japanese denunciation of the treaties has drawn the United States and Great Britain closer together, it was said that our relations have been and will continue to be entirely friendly with the British. Concerning the possibility of removing the stigma of the present immigration ban against the Japanese, the opinion was expressed that this subject was not being considered at this time.

The official disapproval of provocative statements referred, apparently, to a demand voiced yesterday by Anthony J. Diamond, Alaskan Delegate to Congress, for establishment of a new air base in Alaska, and to recent assertions by Chairman Vinson of the House Naval Affairs Committee that the United States must lay down five new ships for every three possessed by Japan.

It was considered significant yesterday, however, when it was made known that Mr. Vinson had changed his viewpoint.

Until the last day or two high officials of the Navy Department have indulged in various public comments which appear to fall within the range of the "hypothetical" matters on which the Administration frowns.

Nye Speaks to Japanese.

Shortly after the Government's attitude was officially outlined, Senator Gerald P. Nye, chairman of the Munitions Inquiry Committee, broadcast a similarly moderate-toned commentary direct to Japan. This was an innovation. By transpacific telephone to a Japanese newspaper, he expressed his view that peace lovers deplored the breakdown of naval treaties because it tended to create a new "breeding ground of suspicion" and to engender ill feeling, "if it does not lead to worse." He seized the opportunity to renew attack upon the munitions in-

Curb Brokers Provide Yule Cheer for 2,500

New York, Dec. 21 (AP).—Brokers on the New York Curb Exchange today played Santa Claus to 2,500 poor children who live in the lower end of the city.

Observing an annual custom followed since 1921, the exchange provided a Christmas tree and a brass band to supply a Yuletide background and then had one of its members in the garb of Santa hand to each child a sweater and an order for a pair of shoes.

Baker's Attack On TVA Set-up Irks McSwain

Beck Also Biased in His Opinion, Is Charge of Representative.

Statements by former War Secretary Newton D. Baker and former Representative James M. Beck, Pennsylvania, assailing the constitutionality of TVA, were disputed yesterday by Representative John J. McSwain (Democrat), South Carolina.

McSwain insisted when the two attorneys were retained by the Edison Institute to pass on the legality of the power project "it was a foregone conclusion" that "their opinion would be favorable to the power trust."

The Representative argued that Congress had authority to create the TVA on the theory that it can regulate interstate commerce, including the discharge of flood waters. He added the development also enabled Congress to provide for National defense.

Upholds Right to Resources.

"The people," McSwain said, "are demanding the exercise by the Congress of the full limit of Congressional power in the interest of the people. These great resources of water power, wrapped up in these interstate rivers, belong to all the people and Congress has the right to see that they are used for the benefit of all the people—not only in time of war but also in time of peace."

McSwain recalled Baker's part in the Muscle Shoals controversy while he was in the Cabinet.

"When the power trust was seeking to prevent Henry Ford from acquiring the Muscle Shoals property," McSwain said, "any argument that could be used to block that proposal by Ford was resorted to.

Points to Opinion of Baker.

"Perhaps Mr. Baker will remember now that on March 4, 1924, he addressed a letter to the Hon. Harry Hull, of Iowa, member of the Committee on Military Affairs, who had signed a minority report. * * * Mr. Baker stated that Muscle Shoals is a great inexhaustible national asset and, too important to our national economy—whether in time of peace or in time of war—to be privately owned, and that 'Muscle Shoals is a palpable gold mine.'

"If Mr. Baker was right in 1924 that Muscle Shoals should not fall into the hands of private interests then Congress was right in 1933 when it enacted the Tennessee Valley Authority."

Meanwhile, Frank R. McNinch, Federal Power Commission chairman, described an ultimate 50 per cent cut in the country's electricity bill as the ultimate goal of the Roosevelt power program.

Citing Canadian rates of 2 1-5 cents for the same amount of power which costs Americans 5½ cents, McNinch concluded:

"We are trying to narrow the gap between the cost of production and consumption and bring the price down to what Canada has proved power can be generated and sold for."

would be abrogated under the department plan.

"Well, you can't have two bosses in time of war," he said.

He disputed the contention that a draft of labor was in contemplation.

"To the best of my knowledge and belief," he said, "the War Department is not contemplating a draft of labor."

Watson Protests.

James E. Watson, former Republican leader of the Senate, appeared voluntarily yesterday to say he resented the implication in previous testimony that he had been "influenced" to support a postwar embargo on dyes.

A letter from du Pont files previously placed before the committee, quoted former Senator Penrose (Republican), as telling Watson in 1920 to "give the du Ponts what they want just as far as you can without getting into a row."

The du Ponts and other chemical manufacturers were seeking at the time to get an embargo to protect the domestic dye industry.

Meanwhile, Chairman Nye said a letter by John J. Raskob, placed in evidence Thursday, showed the inspiration for organization of the American Liberty League.

Nye referred to a letter written last month by the former chairman of the Democratic National Committee to a friend who had protested against the trend of the Roosevelt Administration.

Liberty League's Origin.

Raskob, in the letter to R. R. M. Carpenter, retired du Pont vice president, said:

"You haven't much to do and I know of no one that could better take the lead in trying to induce the du Pont and General Motors groups, followed by other big industries, to definitely organize to protect society from the suffering which it is bound to endure if we allow communistic elements to lead the people to believe that all business men are crooks, not to be trusted, and that no one should be allowed to get rich."

The letter added:

"There should be some very definite organization that would come out openly with some plan for educating the people to the value of encouraging people to work; encourage people to get rich; showing the fallacy of communism in its efforts to tear down our capital structure, etc. * * *"

Carpenter told the Senate committee he did nothing about the Raskob suggestion. Irenee du Pont, however, was one of the original founders of the league.

Between You and Me

Speeding up Business Views; Democrats Howling for Their Pound of Flesh.

By Raymond Clapper

ONE purpose behind the creation of the joint business committee formed at White Sulphur Springs was to high-speed the machinery through which the views of business might be registered at Washington.

The United States Chamber of Commerce must poll its membership or have action by its annual convention before it takes a position upon any public question. This is a slow process, too slow for these times. Not long ago, when the chamber sought to move more rapidly by preparing a memorial to Mr. Roosevelt protesting against Administration policies, the White House questioned whether chamber officials were authorized to speak without having polled their members on the questions discussed. The National Manufacturers Association also is subject to some inhibitions in attempting quick-trigger work.

This was never a problem before the Roosevelt Administration descended on Washington. Under the New Deal the tempo has increased sharply and Mr. Roosevelt is fond of sudden, thunderclap strokes of policy. The leisurely lobbying methods of the traditional business organizations are inadequate to such a fast-changing picture. The joint committee is composed of leaders in the chamber and the manufacturers' association, but they are on the committee as individuals, not as representatives of their organizations. This leaves them free to speak on questions concerning which neither organization is committed officially.

It looks like a purely technical differentiation, but it is a little more than that, because the business leaders as a committee of individuals can speak up without having to take account of large minority sentiment which may exist over some questions in the established dues-paying organizations of business.

Democrats in Congress are preparing to claim the pound of flesh they won in the last elections by insisting upon a further reduction in Republican representation on House committees. Senate Democrats are in effect proposing the same thing by maneuvering to pack the Republican minorities on Senate committees with pro-Roosevelt Republicans.

The argument of Democratic house leaders is that since the Republicans have only one-fourth of the seats in the House, why should they hold one-third of the committee seats? Republicans reply that they polled 46 per cent of the popular vote and that these voters are entitled to representation in the committees, where the real legislative work is done.

Republicans should be grateful that it isn't any worse. Thus far the Democrats have not proposed cutting down the number of couches in the Republican cloakrooms, where the tired members sleep off the after effects of the previous night's arduous duties.

Observing the new lows to which utility stocks went in New York after the clash this week between the Administration and power interests, one New Dealer was reminded of the tribute paid to Chauncey Depew upon becoming president of the New York Central Railroad.

The toastmaster predicted that Depew would make his then unpopular railroad the most popular one in the country "because he doubtless will bring its stock within reach of the poorest citizen."

Members of the National Industrial Recovery Board are bracing themselves for the winter kicking season due to begin as soon as Congress returns. Some members of the NIRB are more sensitive than others to this major winter sport of Washington.

Sidney Hillman, tough-muscled, Lithuanian-born president of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers of America, worries least when the brickbats fly. He is accustomed to ducking them because he has been trained in the rough school of labor union politics. Chairman S. Clay Williams, tobacco manufacturer, probably takes the dead cats thrown at NRA most to heart.

Williams and Hillman are the opposing leaders of the two groups on the NIRB. They first clashed in tobacco code hearings months ago, when Hillman, as a member of the NRA labor advisory board, opposed the wage policies advocted by Williams as a tobacco manufacturer.

In NIRB Williams usually is supported by Arthur Whiteside, president of Dun & Bradstreet. Hillman draws his main support from two ex-officio members of the board, Leon Henderson, aggressive chief of the NRA division of research and planning, and Blackwell Smith, the tall, lean young acting general counsel of NRA. This latter group forced the current investigation of profits in the automobile industry to ascertain what would be reasonable wages.

* * * *

It's the little things which make business men, who see much reason in the basic ideas of NRA and AAA, sputter at the way they work out in practice.

One certain concern doesn't use a piece of string in a year because all of its packages are bound with gum paper strips. Yet it must pay a special compensating tax on the gum paper because the gum paper competes with cotton twine, which is subject to an AAA processing tax. The same is true of the paper bags it uses. They compete with cotton bags.

A manufacturer of paper drinking cups has stopped printing the small, wreath-like design around his cups because that puts him under the graphic arts code as well as the paper manufacturing code. If he can devise a machine which will both manufacture the cups and print the decorative design, only the paper manufacturing code will apply.

One company has 32 code authorities claiming jurisdiction over it. Every code authority is maintained by a budget raised out of assessments among firms subscribing to the code so the pressure by each code authority is to claim for itself the benefit of the doubt and hold a firm under its jurisdiction if the slightest pretext can be found.

NRA some time ago issued an order that a firm need subscribe only to the code under which the major share of its business falls. But this company has been unable to obtain a ruling from NRA as to which is its principal code. It is told to apply to the code authorities themselves for exemption. Thus far no code authority has been willing to let go of it.

One bitter dreg remains in The Man Bilbo's cup of triumph. In all these weeks he has not yet received congratulations from his two unsuccessful opponents for the Mississippi senatorship, retiring Senator Hubert Stephens and retiring Representative Ross Collins.

"Those fellows," he said, "would shoot a bird on the ground."

Another paragraph in the platform says:

"A reasonable program of emergency relief expenditures can be financed without debt increase in the fiscal year 1936 by confining unemployment relief to an indispensable minimum and limiting expenditures for all emergency activities next year."

Meanwhile, President Roosevelt revealed that he had not read the business recovery platform. At a press conference he said he would be glad to see any of the representatives of business, but that he knew of no plan for a general business conference. He said he had a copy of the program on his desk and that he expected to read it, together with reports from a number of other organizations, over the week-end. He said he read several reports every week-end and that he gave them all fair and equal consideration.

The report was left at the White House Thursday by C. B. Ames, chairman of the business conference, who did not see the President. It was explained that the President's numerous appointments prevented a personal interview.

Employment Declines.

While business was seeking to make itself heard, both Secretary Perkins and the American Federation of Labor issued gloomy statements on the employment situation.

The statement of the Secretary of Labor estimated that decline in employment in the manufacturing and nonmanufacturing industries amounted to 86,000, as compared with November. The combined weekly pay roll of these industries in November was estimated to be $3,915,000 under that of October. Decline in employment was more pronounced, the statement said, in the nondurable goods industries than in the durable goods industries.

The Labor Department statement said there had been gains in retail trade, coal mining and banks.

"Employment in the manufacturing industries usually decreases in November," Miss Perkins said. "Declines have been reported in November for each year since 1922."

The American Federation of Labor figures were for October. They indicated that in October, 1934, there were 10,671,000 unemployed, compared with 10,122,000 in October, 1933.

Relief List Seen Rising.

The number of persons on relief, the A. F. of L. estimated, was 5,000,000 more last September than in September of last year. It estimated that in September, 1933, there were 13,338,000 persons dependent on relief, compared with 18,402,000 in September, 1934.

The labor group believes that present slowly rising production can not be expected to lift employment over the figure for last May, when it estimated 10,248,000 persons were out of work.

"Clearly we can not count on private industry to find productive work for unemployed in the near future," the statement said.

Replying to the attitude of industry, the A. F. of L. statement said: "Since industry has failed to increase production, the task of putting men to work falls on the Government. Relief needs have reached proportions never before known in any nation, and the Government is faced with the problem of rapidly rising debt if it supports these workers in idleness. Yet, to give them Government work producing for their own needs raises a storm of protest from private business that 'Government is competing' with them unfairly, and thus delaying recovery."

"Fantastic Scheme."

The plan, advanced by Dr. F. E. Townsend, of California, proposes that every person over 60 be given $200 each month with the understanding that the entire sum be spent during the month. Dr. Townsend has opened headquarters in Washington.

Green said he believed such "fantastic schemes" as the Townsend plan are working "incalculable harm" to the cause of old-age pension legislation. He estimated the plan would cost as much as $24,000,000,000 a year, while the total income of the country is only $40,000,000.

Business leaders in their platform recommend serious study of old-age pensions and unemployment insurance. There was no outspoken general opposition to the plans in the conference. It was explained by some of the leaders that they saw in such insurance a safeguard against inflation.

"Employed persons will be asked to contribute to unemployment reserves," one of them said. "They expect to get their money back some day and they want that money to be just as valuable when they receive it as when they paid it. Unemployment insurance should create almost universal opposition to inflation."

In connection with the Townsend proposal, it was said at the White House that Mrs. Roosevelt did not favor the plan. The assertion was in response to published reports that she approved the scheme.

U.S. Impounds 'Moffat Line;' To Operate It

RFC Takes Stock Control Pending Repayment of $10,763,150.

Denver, Dec. 21 (AP).—Uncle Sam became a railroader tonight for the first time since the World War, taking over the Moffatt line in the Colorado Rockies with the apparent intention of operating it until the Denver & Rio Grande Western Railroad pays $10,763,150 borrowed from the Reconstruction Finance Corporation.

The Denver & Rio Grande, jointly controlled by the Missouri Pacific and Western Pacific, had agreed to purchase all outstanding Moffatt stock when it received permission to build the Dotsero cutoff piercing the mountains. RFC officials said the Rio Grande was troubled to pay interest on its loan, and the RFC therefore decided to assume stock control and place its own men in charge.

Denver & Salt Lake.

The Moffatt line is known also as the Denver & Salt Lake. The Dotsero cutoff connects it with the Rio Grande Railroad through the Moffatt tunnel, which places Denver on a transcontinental route.

David H. Moffatt, Denver banker and business leader, started building the road more than 32 years ago.

John W. Barriger, chief examiner for the railroad division of the RFC, announced that Wilson McCarthy of Oakland, Calif., former RFC member, will become president of the line under the new setup. He will succeed William R. Freeman, president since 1917.

Chairman Resigns.

Freeman and Gerald Hughes, chairman of the board, resigned today, and Lawrence C. Phipps, jr., scion of one of Colorado's wealthiest families, was slated to withdraw.

Freeman, however, will return to the board, with Donald C. Bromfield. Others on this body will include McCarthy, A. A. Berle, jr., attorney in the railroad division of the RFC, and George H. Burr, New York broker.

Railroad representatives on the board will continue to be President L. W. Baldwin and Horace Longfellow of the Missouri Pacific and T. M. Schumacher and E. M. Mason of the Western Pacific.

at San Francisco to J. F. T. O'Connor, Comptroller of the Currency. Mr. O'Connor revealed yesterday he had sent his reply to the board, but he declined to state whether he had accepted or rejected the offer. Such information, he said, would have to come from the board.

It is almost certain that Congress will be asked to give the Reserve Board authority to liberalize the rediscount eligibility rules. The purpose would be to permit the board to accept commercial paper with a maturity of six months or more in order to provide a stimulus to the private banks to make capital working loans.

Dr. Jacob Viner, special assistant to the Secretary of the Treasury, in a report on credit conditions earlier this week recommended that "the rules of eligibility for rediscount at the Federal Reserve Banks be modified so that paper shall not be ineligible merely because it has a maturity as great as six months, nor because of the number of times it has been renewed."

Foresee Lending Stimulated.

Such a step would stimulate bank lending, it was argued, because many commercial banks in the desire to keep their assets liquid are reluctant to make loans for longer than 90 days. Under the proposed change in the eligibility rules six-month paper could be converted into cash on a minute's notice at the reserve banks.

Dr. Viner in commenting on his report said he thought the Reserve Board should be given discretionary power over the maturity limit of eligible paper. It is known that members of the Reserve Board and high Administration officials share this view, believing that if such powers were expanded the Reserve System could be made more useful to large sections of the country.

Dern Submits Plan to Expand Army Strength

Asks Minimum of 2,320 Military Planes in Three Years.

(Associated Press.)

A 1935 program of expansion for the Army and projects under War Department supervision was recommended by Secretary Dern yesterday for submission to the coming Congress. He suggested to Congress:

An aircraft procurement program initiated at once to provide a minimum of 2,320 serviceable military planes within the next three years.

Increases of the Regular Army to 14,000 officers and 165,000 men at the earliest moment warranted by the Nation's financial condition.

More Reserve Officers.

Training of at least 30,000 reserve officers.

Acceleration of the Army housing program so as to complete all approved projects in the near future.

Appropriation or allotment of funds for improvement and maintenance of all approved inland waterways projects within the next your years.

Abolition of the present dual system of measurement, and adoption of the Panama Canal rules as the sole basis for levying tolls on vessels passing through the canal.

1,000 Additional Planes.

The recommendation that the Army Air Corps be given 1,000 additional planes accords with recent conclusions of the Baker aviation committee after its survey of the Air Corps.

The plan for motorization and mechanization provides for equiping Army units with new fast tanks and combat cars, and motorizing some field artillery units.

Dern emphasized that the Roosevelt Administration had carried on numerous important waterways projects of interest to all sections of the country which need further funds.

If funds are made available, he reported, flood control on the lower Mississippi and development of the upper river, improvement of the Lakes-to-the-Gulf waterway, deepening and straightening of the Missouri from Sioux City to Kansas City, and the Bonneville and Fort Peck dams can be completed in about four years.

Lower Power Rates Urged for District

McCarran Also Favors Municipal Control.

Senator Pat McCarran (Democrat), Nevada, yesterday expressed the opinion that the electric rates in Washington, however low in comparison with other cities, should be reduced even more by the Public Utilities Commission.

McCarran, who is a member of the Senate District Committee, said he would wait until the commission reaches its annual agreement with the Potomac Electric Power Co. before taking any action.

The Nevada Senator is also planning to offer a bill to authorize the District to acquire all local public utilities for municipal operation, the purchase price to be lent by the Federal Government.

13 Suits Filed by U. S. On 'Fake' Champagne

Moving to protect the "drinking public" from the consumption of "misbranded" and "adulterated" liquors, the Government yesterday instituted 13 suits, alleging that 1,376 bottles of liquor labeled "champyne" were not champagne.

The suits asked that certain bottled goods described as champagne be confiscated and destroyed. They were filed by Assistant United States Attorney Heflin. He charged that the pure food and drug act had been violated in the labeling.

U. S. Planning To Give Loans For Machinery

New Legislation Proposed to Provide Money to Buy Equipment.

(Associated Press.)

Federally insured loans to give industry up to date machinery were said authoritatively yesterday to be the basis of proposed new legislation benig worked out by officials of the Federal Housing Corporation.

Official sources, which declined to be quoted by name, contended such legislation would give a potential outlet of from $3,000,000,000 to $4,000,000,000 of steel, iron and other capital gods. A simple change in the housing act, it was said, would accomplish the result sought.

Along with this amendment, these officials added, there was under contemplation one which would help to drovide a ready market for mortgages obtained by the housing corporation.

To achieve this purpose, officials said, a mortgage discount agency probably would be set up. Such an agency would handle not only mortgages for home loans, but prospective loans from the plant modernization insurance plan.

One official who has made a recent tour of the country said there was no doubt that business would be quick to take advantage of a provision for such loans.

"They have orders on hand for goods which they can't fill because of the lack of facilities," he sadi.

The plant modernization loans would be handled by the housing corporation and these mortgages given the same discounting outlet that is contemplated for housing mortgages.

Crew Beaches Blazing Vessel, Conquers Fire

Firemen Hurt; Commander Overcome but Returns to Battle Again.

Boston, Dec. 21 (AP).—A long battle with fire aboard the steamer Ontario of the Merchants & Miners Line was won today only after the vessel had been towed away from a dock and beached on Governors Island, half a mile down the harbor. The steamer suffered extensive damage, but officers of the line expressed the opinion she could be repaired.

The Ontario hastened back to port last night after fire was discovered in her cargo of wool tops. Although 50 pieces of land apparatus and two fire boats battled more than seven hours to control the flames, the fire continued to rage in the interior of the vessel. Officials, fearful the South Boston pier, at which she had tied up, would be damaged or that she would capsize in the channel, ordered her removal.

The Ontario was towed to Governors Island and fire boats continued to pour streams of sea water into her. Finally, the decks were cool enough for an inspection. It was found heat had fused plates and hatches and otherwise wrought great damage.

Several firemen were injured, one losing a finger, and others were overcome by fumes. Her crew of 40, commanded by Capt. John Kauserud, remained with the stricken vessel, fighting the flames to the end. The skipper several times was overcome by smoke, but each time he rejoined his men.

The Ontario was nearing the Cape Cod Canal last night when the fire caused her to put back 35 miles to Boston. She was bound for Norfolk and Baltimore. The cause of the fire was not determined.

Two other vessels which had been reported in trouble were proceeding under their own power today. They are the fishing trawler Widgeon and the freighter Severance, en route from New York to Beverly, Mass.

Mais Quits Hideout; Federal Raid Fails

Agents Get Information on Killer's Activities.

Philadelphia, Dec. 21 (AP).—From a raid on an alleged hideout of Robert Mais, Federal agents tonight obtained additional information on the activities of the fugitive killer and his gang, but their quarry had once again fled the pursuing law.

The raid was made on a house in Riverside, N. J., after a huckster was reported to have "tipped" authorities he had seen several men and a woman, resembling members of the Mais band, in the place.

The Riverside house, agents said, is just across the Delaware River from the house in nearby Torresdale Manor, where, authorities disclosed they have learned, William Weiss, kidnaped night life figure, was held before he was slain.

The communique noted that Bolivia, which already has accepted the peace plan, has asked that the embargo be lifted in her favor.

Numbers Raid Staged in War On Fontaine's

8 Suspects Seized by D. C. Police to Face Lottery Charges.

Jimmy's place is located, were indignant at the activity of the Washington police. Why, they asked, didn't the Washington police clean up gambling dives in their own city?

Source of D. C. Gaming.

The local police argue that Jimmy's place, although it is in Maryland, is the headquarters of much of the gambling that goes on in Washington, particularly in connection with the numbers game.

What the Washington police have now done is to make Jimmy's place strictly a Maryland affair. They are determined to harass those who try to enter it on District territory, thus putting the issue squarely up to the authorities of Prince Georges County.

Alan Bowie, State's Attorney for Prince Georges County, said yesterday that the county would have no criminal activity were it not for the proximity of the National Capital.

Three Convicted.

"I am trying to prevent the operation of illegal gambling machines in Prince Georges County," Bowie declared in the Upper Marlboro Police Court.

Summarizing his prosecution of four Capitol Heights men charged with illegal use of slot machinse, he asserted that Washingtonians were to blame for the condition of the county.

"The criminal business of this county would be very little if it did not border the District of Columbia," he said. "I ask for a verdict against these men as a means of preventing Washingtonians from bringing gambling devices into this county."

Three of the men were convicted. They were Harry Kans, James M. Toney and H. G. Cottrell. Kans was said to be the operator of a Capitol Heights business establishment, while Toney and Cottrell were allegedly "interested in" the machines.

Washington Blamed.

The formal charge against Kans was "keeping a gaming table." He was fined $10. Similar charges against each of the other two were dismissed, but they were fined $100 each for their "interests in a gaming table." All appealed the cases.

Harry Ferguson, said by police to be the operator of another Capitol Heights business establishment, also was tried on a charge of "keeping a gaming table," but dismissed. Another proprietor will be tried next week, police said.

The men were arrested last December 14 by County Policeman Elon Turner, acting under orders from Mr. Bowie, who initiated a drive on the county's slot machine situation.

The drive was an indirect outgrowth of the Capitol Heights barroom disorders which last November 25 resulted in the death of Bennett A. Wells, 28, of that town.

Civic organizations, complaining bitterly against the disorders, laid the trouble to Washingtonians who nightly visited the Maryland barrooms after the District bars closed at midnight.

History Marker Moved as Jimmy's Fence Is Razed

Not only has part of Jimmy La Fontaine's fence disappeared, but an historical marker alongside it as well. This marker, removed yesterday to a point on the other side of Bladensburg road, told how George Washington passed by there on two occasions.

J. Alexis Shriver, erector of historical markers for Maryland, who supervised the work, said the removal had nothing to do with the "harassment campaign" being waged by District police against the alleged gambling house.

He pointed out that he had planned the removal for some time, and yesterday was set for removal day. A concrete base could not be constructed around the marker in its original location, he said.

The marker reads:

"At this point George Washington first entered Prince Georges County (as now constituted), August, 1751, and made his last exit therefrom, December 18, 1798."

Roosevelt Calls Chiefs to Chart Congress Task

White House Parley Is Set Thursday to Prepare Program.

(Associated Press.)

The Administration high command will gather around a White House table with President Roosevelt next Thursday to chart definitely the legislative course it expects Congress to follow.

The conference, to be attended by the Cabinet, members of the Emergency Council and other New Deal agency chiefs, is slated to be one of the most important called by the President.

Final decision on much of the Administration's legislative program is to be sought.

The President's annual message to Congress, which he described yesterday as tentatively drafted, is to receive the finishing touches before then. Mr. Roosevelt plans to read it to his conferees and obtain their collective opinion.

Democratic Congressional chieftains expect Mr. Roosevelt to deliver in person his first message at a joint session of the House and Senate. Preparations are being made for the event at the Capitol.

Party leaders want him to deliver it for the phychological effect they expect it to have on the members as well as on the country as a whole. It will not deal with specific legislation but rather with policies and principles. Most of the legislative program has been finished.

It has not been definitely decided how much is to be asked for the PWA. Various sums ranging up to $5,000,000,000 have been mentioned in Administration quarters. However, some of the President's economic advisers claim that it is not necessary now to decide finally. They contend that if an upturn in business comes next summer, a large public works outlay will be unnecessary.

Plea of Not Guilty Entered by Beard

Arraigned in the District Supreme Court on new indictments charging them with conspiring to violate the gaming laws and with actually violating them, Sam R. Beard and 10 codefendants yesterday pleaded not guilty.

Beard, reputed head of a syndicate that was furnishing race track information to bookmakers, was arrested in a raid at the Mather Building. Police said they found 40 trunk lines, each with 40 connections, thus making possible 1,600 telephone calls at the same time.

The switchboards and other paraphernalia found in the place were carted away by police and are being saved for presentation at the trial. He is at liberty under $10,000 bond.

Gay Christmas At White House For Roosevelts

with white lights and tinsel. This room is open to the public.

The family Christmas tree, located in the hall on the second floor, will be lighted with candles in accordance with the President's expressed wish. The danger of this custom—frowned upon by the fire department—will be mitigated by chemical treatment of the tree to prevent combustion.

The President will begin the holidays today by remaining away from the Executive offices. His mother, Sara Delano Roosevelt, is coming here from Hyde Park, N. Y., and all others of the family except Mr. and Mrs. Elliott Roosevelt, his son and daughter-in-law, will be here for the week-end.

A Lot of Ties.

For one thing, the President remarked, he has his message to Congress to work on. For another, he has some presents to attend to. Just what the President and Mrs. Roosevelt will give each other has not been divulged, but one guess is he will get a lot of ties, among other things.

At noon, the day before Christmas, the President and Mrs. Roosevelt will receive all employes of the White House, the clerks, gardeners, policemen and servants. The same afternoon he will light the community Christmas tree, while Mrs. Roosevelt takes part in several other celebrations.

As has been a Roosevelt custom of many years, the President will gather all members of the family about him Christmas Eve for a reading of Dickens' "A Christmas Carol." Then stockings will be fixed for the grandchildren.

Christmas dinner will be the first of a series of holiday celebrations. A children's party will be given the afternoon of December 28 for the grandchildren; a dance will be given the following night for the President's children, and a supper-dance is planned for New Year's Eve.

The President's children who will be here are Mrs. Anna Dall, James, Franklin, jr., and John Roosevelt. Mr. and Mrs. Elliott Roosevelt went to Dallas, Tex., for Christmas, but will be back before New Year's.

2 New Planets Discovered.

Algiers, Algeria, Dec. 21 (AP).—Two small planets were discovered today by M. Boyer, chief of the Algiers observatory, bringing to a total of seven the asteroids discovered by him this year. The new ones were registered as "1934-xa," and "1934-xb."

Vigilantes Arm; Urged to Kill Lynch Rioters

Fourth Man Dies as Result of Fight With Soldiers Over Prisoner.

Shelbyville, Tenn., Dec. 21 (AP).—Fearing a fresh outbreak tomorrow, vigilantes today gave notice they would use armed force to quell any further uprising as last Wednesday's rioting claimed its fourth death.

The 550 National Guardsmen sent here to insure peace were ordered to remain through Saturday. They are costing the State approximately $5,000 a day.

"If we have to kill some of these fellows, let's just kill them," Hance said, adding: "If we have to die, let's die."

Leaders Appointed.

He was speaking to a meeting of the vigilante committee.

"There is no use letting them take our town," Hance said.

The committee decided to appoint ten leaders to command groups of eight armed men each "for the purpose of maintaining law and order, protecting property and cooperating with the sheriff and police."

Wednesday's trouble came when a mob of between 500 and 600 persons made three vain attempts to break through lines of National Guardsmen and take E. K. Harris, 22, colored, on trial for attacking a 14-year-old white girl. Harris now is in jail at Nashville.

Guardsmen first used tear gas and then resorted to firearms and bayonets. A number of persons were wounded. Infuriated members of the mob burned the county courthouse.

Floyd (Pat) Lawes, 28, a farmer from an adjoining county, died in the hospital here today from head wounds. One man was killed at the riot scene. A second died a short time later in a hospital and another succumbed to wounds yesterday.

Troops To Remain.

Before the vigilante meeting, Adj. Gen. J. H. Ballew and Col. R. H. Bond, commanding the militia, said "the danger of any concerted mob action is definitely past."

General Ballew acceded to the request of the citizens, however, that the soldiers remain through tomorrow, when a holiday throng is expected.

Ballew told the committee that "some members of the mob are still in town" and that he had seen several on the street today, but declared "the mere fact that they are here" was not an indication of trouble.

LaGuardia Pushes City Power Plant

Appoints Board of 14 to Draw Up Plans.

New York, Dec. 21 (AP).—Determined to carry on his fight for reduced utility rates, Mayor Fiorello H. LaGuardia today appointed a board of 14 engineers to draw up immediately plans for the construction of a municipal power plant.

His action was taken as a result of a conference in Washington on Wednesday with President Roosevelt.

Included on the board is Maurice P. Davidson, water supply, gas and electricity commissioner, who has estimated the cost of a municipal plant at $108,000,000.

As soon as possible, Mayor LaGuardia told the board he wished to submit plans to Secretary Ickes as the basis for a Federal loan.

Trolley Strike Ended By Coast Settlement

An agreement for settlement of the Pacific Railway strike in Los Angeles was reached yesterday by the National Mediation Board.

Formal terms, local headquarters of the board reported yesterday, will be signed shortly. A wage increase and changes in working rules were included. Part of the raise in pay will become effective January 1 and the remainder July 1.

By agreement, the strike was called off pending negotiations. Two unions of the interurban road figured in the controversy.

Nicolaieff Group Handed to Court For Kiroff Murder

Moscow, Dec. 21 (AP).—Leonid Nicolaieff, the accused assassin of Sergei Kiroff, and 13 other alleged members of an anti-Soviet group were handed over to the military collegium of the supreme court today.

The official report of the inquiry said it had been established that Nicolaieff killed Kiroff by commission of the terrorist underground organization, "Leningrad Center."

The motive of the group, the report said, was to "disorganize the leadership of the Soviet government through terrorist acts against the chief leaders of the Soviet regime and thus gain a change in the present policy in the spirit of the so-called Zinovieff-Trotsky platform."

The development came as reports circulated that Gregory Zinovieff, who was named in the official report, and Leo Kamineff were under arrest for counter-revolutionary activities.

Newpapers charged that the two former leaders of the Communist Party were implicated in a plot which resulted in the assassination of Kiroff, high Soviet official, December 1.

Code Violator to Seek Injunction in Georgia

Atlanta, Dec. 21 (AP).—John Whitley's first bids on Federal aid highway contracts since the NRA preferred charges against him for violating wage provisions of the code today were rejected by the State highway board and Whitley said he would seek an injunction against the board.

The contracts on which Whitley's low bids totaled $181,373 were awarded to the next low bidder, subject to approval of the United States Bureau of Public Roads.

Little Gloria Will Spend Christmas With Mother

New York, Dec. 21 (AP).—Christmas at Mrs. Gloria Vanderbilt's house is going to be so private, a member of the family said today, that "not even Santa Claus will be able to crash in."

But the embargo need not worry little Gloria Vanderbilt, who by a Supreme Court order will leave the home of Mrs. Harry Payne Whitney, her aunt, to spend the day with her mother.

Church Won't Accept Vineyardist as Pastor

Paris, Dec. 21 (U.P.).—The Protestant interdenominational $1,000,000 American church of Paris today turned down an offer of Robert Davis, former Dartmouth football player and lay preacher, to occupy the pulpit without pay, because three members of the committee objected.

They said he owns and operates a vineyard in Bordeaux, making claret, which makes him unfit for the pulpit. The church has a congregation which includes socially and financially important American residents of Paris.

Crime-Chasers Plan To Blot Out State Lines

Chicago, Dec. 21 (AP).—A middle Western crime-chasing treaty, intended to make it impossible for fugitive gunmen to jump State lines and balk their pursuers, was the goal of a conference headed here today by Attorney General Philip Lutz, jr., of Indiana.

By interstate compacts, Lutz said, it would be possible to obliterate lines in law enforcement, eventually giving police officers of one State the legal right to continue pursuit into the adjoining ones.

Bottle Comes Up From Deep Where British Ship Sank

President Roosevelt regards an ancient liquor bottle, fished from the York River by PWA workers, as an interesting relic of independence.

He said so yesterday when curious callers noticed this addition to the toy donkeys and elephants on his desk.

Holding the bottle aloft to emphasize its emptiness, the President explained it was found on the spot where a British frigate went down in the seige of Yorktown.

Nevada U. Will Offer Course in Marriage

Reno, Nev., Dec. 21 (AP).—Aware that both divorces and marriages have increased considerably in Reno in the past year, the University of Nevada today took steps to save its students from unhappy marital ventures.

Dr. James R. Young, head of the department of psychology, announced a course in marriage, homemaking and divorce will be offered to upper class men and women next semester.

Kellogg Doubts Nations Move For World War

New York, Dec. 21 (AP).—Frank B. Kellogg looked at the world tonight and decided it is not preparing for war.

Keen and feeling fit after a recent operation, the former Secretary of State sat in a quiet hotel suite and refused to be alarmed by Japan's denunciation of the Washington Naval Treaty, the Gran Chaco war or central Europe's turmoil.

"No, we're not going to have another war," said the snowy-haired peacemaker who was responsible for the Pact of Paris under which the powers renounced war. He is now a judge of the Permanent Court of International Justice in Geneva.

"The people have had enough of war. It is different now. They know another war like the one they have had would mean the end of their Western civilization."

Japan, he feels, "has no idea of war; no warlike disposition at all."

League Settles Difficulties.

Firm in his belief in the strength of existing peace treaties, Kellogg made it plain that "war scares" do not scare him.

"You will note," he said, "that when Hungary and Yugoslavia went about settling their differences the other day, they went to the League of Nations under a treaty.

"And I believe the trouble will be smoothed out.

"I read the other day that the Saar Basin was a danger point. Now that idea seems to have disappeared."

Nor did the 1929 Nobel Peace Prize winner see any wide or lasting menace in the prolonged Chaco war between Paraguay and Bolivia.

"It is a sore point," he commented. "It has been a sore point for 50 or 75 years—like the Tacna-Arica dispute.

"We settled that. It was one of the last things to be accomplished during my term as Secretary of State.

"The Chaco trouble will be settled, too, in time.

Leads in Peace Effort.

"As a matter of fact, no part of the world has done more for world peace than South America."

And peace, Kellogg said, has found a powerful ally in the League of Nations.

"It is a place to talk things over," he added. "It acts like a safety valve."

As for America's economic recovery, the former Secretary does not doubt it is on the way. The Nation, he declared, is getting well as she did before—"through the ability and independence of her people."

With Mrs. Kellogg he came to New York for a few days to attend to business matters. He will spend the winter in California, stopping en route at his St. Paul home.

France to End Pact If Japanese Won't

but that she is always ready for the limitation of armaments."

An authoritative source said the government's decision formally to declare the treaty terminated was in line with its desire to get France on record as opposed to the "parity" system set up in the document.

Naval leaders have long held that the naval ratio assigned France—1.75 as against 3 for Japan and 5 for the United States and Great Britain—was unfair to her.

French Action Surprises Expert

London, Dec. 21 (AP).—A sudden French decision to get France on record, along with Japan, as opposed to continuance of the Washington Naval Treaty took British and American experts by surprise here today.

They had been assured previously that France would let Japan take all the responsibility for abrogating the pact, though welcoming the chance it gave her to better the naval ratio assigned her.

With tri-power conversations here looking to replacement of the treaty adjourned without substantial result, the American delegates, preparing to sail for home December 29, were nevertheless ready to confer with the British and Japanese before that date if any further discussions seemed necessary.

U. S. 'Obstinacy' Scored by Japanese

Tokyo, Dec. 21 (AP).—A statement that Japan's motives are most peaceful will accompany her formal denunciation of the Washington Naval Treaty, expected to take place December 27.

The foreign office is preparing the statement, which will be issued simultaneously with the formal notification to other powers that Japan has abrogated the treaty effective December 31, 1934, it was revealed.

Car Pooling Progress Reported by Eastman

New York, Dec. 21 (AP).—Joseph B. Eastman, Federal Coordinator of Transportation, said at the conclusion of his conference with the board of the Association of American Railroads today that "progress" had been made toward an understanding on the question of car pooling.

Study of the subject would continue, he said, in his own organization and in the railroad association. Eastman planned to return to Washington tonight.

dustry and to suggest that Japan, as well as other powers, should investigate the arms traffic.

At the same time the circulation of a "white paper," that is, a small pamphlet entitled "Japan's Stand on Disarmament," wherein Capt. Tamon Yamaguchi, newly assigned naval attache of the Japanese Embassy, discusses the naval situation rather bluntly, came in for a good deal of notice and some criticism. Although this was entirely a restatement of the Japanese attitude, which has been expressed repeatedly of late, his argument that a nation with a big navy "is inclined to take a high-handed manner," that this tends to make trouble in nations with "a lesser ratio" and that it therefore "might lead to war," was interpreted in some quarters as provocative. However, the general tenor of the pamphlet was not subject to this comment.

Surprised at France.

That Japan is going to denounce the Washington Treaty has long been a foregone conclusion. However, officials were evidently somewhat surprised at the French announcement that so far as France is concerned the Washington Treaty expires at the end of 1936. France is not joining Japan in denouncing the treaty. That would be superfluous. But the announcement from Paris reflected long-standing dissatisfaction with the inferior ratio, far below that of Japan, which was assigned to France in 1921. Moreover, the French have never liked nor since then agreed to accept parity with Italy. The Washington Treaty put them both on the same footing in battleships. Every subsequent attempt to reconcile Franco-Italian demands has proved in vain. Neither would come into the London Treaty. Each has remained unwilling to concede parity to the other.

Hence, while Japan is taking the initiative in terminating the Washington Treaty, it causes no grief in Paris or in Rome, as the Japanese fully understand. No official comment was forthcoming here on the French attitude.

Delegate Diamond's demand for an Alaskan air base was coupled with the proposal that all of the Pacific Coast, Hawaii and Pacific possessions might need to be more strongly fortified. "Every Senator and Representative," he was quoted as telling the Associated Press, "from west of the Rocky Mountains, with the possible exception of Senator Borah, of Idaho, would vote to strengthen American fortifications in the Pacific."

Similarly, Representative Lea (Democrat), California, was quoted by the Associated Press as saying, "Japan's prospective action has made clear that we must depend on ourselves for defense and not on international agreements."

Regrets Pact's End.

Senator Nye achieved an overnight prominence and popularity in Japan by a recent speech in which he went much further than any other Senator has thus far in sympathazing with Japan's position on the naval ratios. Because of this he was invited by the Japanese newspaper, Nichi Nichi, to set a precedent in broadcasting an interview by radio-telephone. However, it is quite likely that he did not come up to Japanese expectations for he made plain his disappointment over the collapse of the treaties.

According to a text given out by the Senator's office, he said in reply to a question on what he thought of Japan's action in ending the treaty:

"I think I understand, in a way, your wish in Japan for parity as respects naval strength. It has always been repulsive to every people to be denied parity with others.

"Yet I deeply regret, as do many other peace-loving people in America, that the 5-5-3 naval treaty between Japan, Great Britain and the United States has been broken. The first result of this breaking is going to be at once an increase in the profits of the private shipbuilders of these countries. A second result will be the new breeding ground afforded for suspicion. It now becomes patriotic in all these countries to arouse these suspicions. If it does not lead to worse it will be only because there are those in each of these countries who will manage to keep their heads and be sensible in the atmosphere which the treaty break creates.

Did Not Present Plan.

"Speaking personally, and quite unofficially, I regret one thing very much—namely, that Japan did not see fit to more strongly present at the naval conference before it broke up, its proposal which has been discussed by her statesmen. That proposal, as we have been given to understand it here, was to provide for parity for Japan, to provide for a cutting in half of present naval strength and for the abandonment of all such naval construction as contemplated offensive rather than defensive warfare."

In reply to a question on the munitions investigation, he said:

"Our munitions investigation here in America has been of such consequence as makes me wish that every nation would undertake a like study. It is now clearly revealed that a very large contributing factor to the cause of war is the private munitions industry, which finds large profit in preparation for war and still larger profit in war itself. There must be domestic and international curbing of the influence of this private manufacture of munitions, which has made of the issue of national defense the world over nothing less than an international racket for profit."

Neutrality Must Be Defended.

As for plans to keep the United States neutral in another war, he said:

"The question of neutrality constitutes one simple enough for brief discussion. I can only say that it is my hope in the event of further conflict in the world—conflict which does not involve our welfare and peace—that our country can maintain a neutrality not subject to interruption by selfish and individual commercial interests. Always too large is the danger of our neutrality being destroyed by attack upon shipping under the American flag. A safeguard against such a break of neutrality is the purpose involved in legislation I have introduced to make it unlawful to use the American flag upon any cargo whose destination is a nation at war.

"But would we not do better to devote ourselves to the prevention of war first? When we talk about neutrality we consider a situation we ought to want to prevent if at all possible."

Colorado Gold Output Rises.

Denver, Dec. 21 (AP).—This year's gold production in Colorado's mines was worth $15,000,000, 400 per cent more than in 1933, Mark A. Skinner, Denver mint superintendent, said today. Silver production jumped to $1,200,000 from $12,000.

Mystery Shrouds Crash in Desert

the ship was bound from Amsterdam to Batavia, Java, on a flight which was expected to set a record.

It had on board mail and packages to be delivered to the East Indian colonists in time for Christmas. The victims of the disaster were three passengers, Prof. Walch, of Batavia University; M. Beretti, director of Aneta, official news agency of the Dutch East Indies; M. Kort, a business man, and the crew of four, M. Beeknan, commander and chief pilot; Second Pilot Van Steenbergh, H. A. Walweyn, the mechanic, and Wireless Operator C. Van Zadelhogg.

When last heard from, soon after it had taken off from Cairo, the Uiver reported by radio that it had encountered difficulties in a storm near Rutbah Wells. This fact led officials here to believe the plane may have been struck by lightning.

Dutch Mourn Loss Of Seven in Plane

Amsterdam, Dec. 21 (AP).—Preseason gayety was turned to mourning here today as word was received of the destruction of the airline Uiver with deaths of all on board.

The populace gave evidence of a deep sense of personal loss engendered by the fact that the plane's record in the England-to-Melbourne air derby had made it a symbol to all Holland of the nation's daring.

Queen Wilhemina and Princess Juliana both kept in close touch with the search for the huge ship and were among the first to express grief over the disaster.

Both the speaker and the minister of transport paid tribute to the dead when Parliament opened this afternoon.

Great Britain To Stage Own Arms Inquiry

MacDonald Reveals Royal Commission Will Be Named for Quiz.

London, Dec. 21 (AP).—Great Britain will stage its own arms inquiry, but just how all-embracing it will be only the national government knows.

A royal commission will be given the task of investigating the arms industry, Prime Minister Ramsay MacDonald told the House of Commons just before it rose for the Christmas holidays.

He gave no indication, however, how large or small that task would be, parrying warily eager questions as to the powers to be vested in the royal commission.

Questioners were referred to the declaration of Sir John Simon, foreign secretary, made before the Commons November 22, which the House accepted, in which Sir John declared the government would oppose any "fishing inquiry" dealing with rumors concerning conduct of the arms trade.

Aside from that reference the prime minister gave only one definite hint as to what the commission might do.

A question put by Herbert Williams, conservative member from South Croydon, as to whether the body would have the power to "send for those people who are constantly sowing seeds of suspicion in this country and ask them to justify their contentions" drew the prime minister's quick and crisp "certainly!"

The United States Senate arms inquiry excited great interest in Britain, and Labor and Liberal factions in Parliament, stirred by the mention made of British firms and persons last summer and fall insistently demanded an investigation in Great Britain.

England Views Dollar as Bar To Stabilization

London, Dec. 21 (AP).—Until President Roosevelt indicates whether he intends to knock any more coppers off America's 59-cent dollar, Great Britain will fight shy of any move toward stabilization.

That was the consensus in financial circles tonight after Neville Chamberlain, chancellor of the exchequer, told the Commons today that Britain under present circumstances can not "risk" stabilization of her currency.

The lack of balance between the dollar, the franc and the pound sterling, cited in Chamberlain's speech as "the real difficulty with the situation," make the perils of stabilization too great, it was felt.

Observers' Views.

Financial observers in London long have believed the chancellor of the exchequer would be reluctant to act until President Roosevelt definitely says whether the dollar will be further devalued, say to the 50-cent level.

Such an announcement from Washington would "make Europe sit up and take notice," one source said, and probably put Chamberlain in favorable mood to talk business.

The chancellor told the Commons he saw "no reason why we should not anticipate further rise in wholesale prices of primary commodities, which I believe would do more to overcome inharmonious elements in the currency system of the world than anything else."

Looking Forward.

"I look forward with confidence," he added, "to the day when we shall be able once again to embark upon an international currency standard.

"Meanwhile, I don't think that, whatever may be the clouds on the horizon, any of us have reason for pessimism."

Britain, before giving up her "freedom to move the pound where we want it," must wait "until there is such a change in the price level as will bring the dollar and franc into greater harmony with one another—the position which is the object, I understand, of the United States Administration to bring about and for which I, for one, wish all possible success," he said.

General's Wife Loses $500 Cigarette Case

Grieving Husband Gets Diver's Aid To Seek Lost Wife

Carmel, Calif., Dec. 21 (AP).—The hunt for Mrs. Eliot Boke Schaffner was extended today to the bottom of Cemetery Bay under the direction of her grief-stricken husband, Joseph Schaffner, wealthy Chicago clothing manufacturer.

Reluctant to abandon all hope that Mrs. Schaffner might be found alive despite a four-day search, the husband conceded, nevertheless, that the circumstances of her disappearance indicated that "something dreadful has happened to her."

Schaffner arrived this morning at the same time that a diver, Oscar Lager, was called into the case. The manufacturer was shown a slipper, identified as belonging to his wife, found yesterday in the kelp at Cookes Gove, not far from the point to which police dogs had followed her trail from her Carmel home.

"She had been melancholy of recent months," he said. "She was a virtual invalid the last ten years and when her hearing began to fail she could no longer enjoy her one recreation, music."

'Rabbit Fever' Warning Issued

Hunters Especially Are Cautioned to Take Extreme Care.

Warnings that this is "rabbit fever" season in Washington and surrounding territory were issued yesterday by the Medical Society of the District of Columbia.

Scientifically identified as tularemia, "rabbit fever" is a disease in many ways similar to the dreaded typhoid fever, physicians pointed out.

Hunters were admonished to suspect as infected all rabbits which failed to attempt to escape when trapped in fields, or stood up when shot, instead of trying to bound to the underbrush.

A pair of rubber gloves, the Medical Society pointed out, should be worn when skinning or cleaning rabbits. The disease germ enters the system through the skin, usually by way of a cut, scratch or insect bite. If the liver or spleen of a rabbit being cleaned are enlarged, it must be taken as a suspicious sign of tularemia.

10 Millions Set As Maryland's Relief Tax Goal

Nice, Seeing Hopkins, Says Indirect Levy Will Be Necessary.

After conferring with Relief Administrator Harry L. Hopkins yesterday, Governor-elect Harry W. Nice, of Maryland, said the Legislature would have to provide the means of raising at least $10,000,000 for relief in 1934, the Associated Press reported.

"Mr. Hopkins will cooperate to the limit, but he made it plain that Maryland will have to assist itself," Nice said. "The Legislature, in the first 30 days of its session, must provide for raising at least $8,000,000—no, at least $10,000,000—for relief by indirect taxation."

He said his administration would inherit no State funds for relief from the Ritchie administration, but on the contrary would inherit a deficit approaching $8,000,000.

Survey Impends.

He did not disclose what form the indirect taxation would take, saying that this matter would be studied by the advisory committee on taxation and finances, headed by William J. Casey, which he had appointed to aid him.

"It will have to be indirect taxation because our direct taxation is dedicated to specific purposes and real estate is already burdened heavily enough," the Governor-elect added.

Nice told Hopkins that relief costs in Maryland for 1934 would be at least $18,000,000. He said costs for the present year were $18,000,000 in addition to money expended through the civil works program, which materially reduced the direct relief burden.

"Mr. Hopkins said Maryland was placed under the necessity of taking immediate action looking to the raising of its proportionate share," he said.

Share Not Determined.

No specified percentage was set as the State's proportionate share, he said.

State Relief Administrator Harry Greenstein, one of those accompanying the Governor-elect to the conference, said that during the present year the Federal Government had borne about 65 per cent of the relief burden in the State.

Nice said that he had asked Hopkins if anything similar to the civil works program could be expected during the coming year, but that the administrator was unable to give him an answer. He said no very definite estimate of the relief burden could be made until he knew whether there would be such a program.

Others accompanying the Governor-elect were Senator-elect George L. Radcliffe, Democrat, whose cooperation was praised by Mr. Nice; Simon E. Sobeloff, chairman of his advisory committee on relief, and Purdon Wright, who is advising the Governor-elect on budgetary matters.

Before going into Hopkins' office, Mr. Nice said:

"We thought we would have some State funds for relief on hand, but it now turns out that we will have a deficit of $2,500,000 in the State's operating expenses, and overdrafts of the State roads commission of nearly $5,000,000."

"Tomorrow's Money."

Commenting on the road commission's finances, he said:

"If you spend tomorrow's money, it is hard to find some of yesterday's money to put back for tomorrow."

Because of the deficit, he said, the new administration will expect the Federal Government to assume as much of the burden as it can. He indicated that he had stressed the State's financial condition in his talk with Hopkins.

The Governor-elect made public estimates compiled by Wright on the State budget for the fiscal year beginning next October 1.

The total of general funds anticipated was put at $9,293,060. Added to this money was $806,744 in contributions from special taxation expected to be added to the general funds, making a total of $10,099,904 in anticipated revenue.

Tentative allowances for the operation of all regular State departments and institutions were put at $12,402532, leaving a balance of $2,300,728 to be raised—in addition to the special funds for carrying the Stat's share of relief in the calendar year 1935.

A Grand Dame Nominates Dr. W. T. Gill, Jr., Along With Others for 'Best Dressed' Title

John Hains, Custis Hall, Sir Ronald Lindsay Also Mentioned.

A voice from the past, ancient yet firm, except when trembling with righteous indignation, spoke up yesterday in opposition to all those who have been named in The Post's search for the best-dressed man in Washington.

It came over the telephone at tea time, so perfectly modulated and yet so dominating.

"How do you get your information about well-dressed men?" it asked.

"Mostly from ladies and gentlemen, who, like yourself, telephone or write in to The Post," she was told.

"Oh, really!" there was a faint sniff to the voice. Over the telephone one could almost hear the teacups rattling.

"Well, my dear," the voice went on, "you don't know me and I'm sure I don't know you, but I am an old cave dweller. More ancient than you can imagine. Really, I am as old as Washington. And I know whereof I speak when I say that you haven't mentioned a really well-dresed gentleman yet. No, not one.

"Why, I am horrified. Perfectly horrified." One could almost see the eyebrows lift, feel the delicate hand shake with an outburst of emotion.

Recalls Days of Yore.

"For many, many years I have known Washington. The real Washington. The Washington as it was before"—there was a pause and the voice ended the sentence with disdainful finality—"the war." One felt she wanted to say the New Deal, but could not quite bring herself to it.

"Now, if you would really find a well-dressed man, you should look among the professional men. Why, there is Dr. William Tignor Gill, jr., the physician. He is the best-dressed man in Washington. I am an old, old woman. And I know."

Hugh Walpole should have been at the receiving end of the telephone. He would have known the right answer there.

"Yes," the voice continued, "he is the most perfectly dressed man Washington has known in ten years. He's everything. He's perfect. Oh, in a conservative way, you know. Nothing flashy, ever. But how I go on.

"Now, young man, don't you try to identify me. I'll slay you if you do." Was it a coy titter that followed?

"Oh, I admit to being a snob. I am and I know it. But I still believe in tradition, birth, family and all that. It means much to me. And that is why I am going to say this.

"No one has mentioned John T. Hains, son of the late Peter Hains, for whom Hains Point was named. John Hains is the most perfectly dressed thing that ever came down Pennsylvania or Connecticut avenue. We used to call his father the edition de luxe, he was so perfect. A tiny little chap, but perfect."

A Trio Is Nominated.

Again a pause, then the indignation once more.

"Oh, these changes, they make me sick at my tummy. But Dr. Gill and John Hains, and, oh my, yes, Custis Lee Hall, there you have a trio. You need mention no others. In fact, my dear, you must mention no other. For none are better, nor so good as they."

And that was all. The past faded away. One could imagine the receiver being dropped wearily, the arm weakly waved to have tea things taken away. A good job done. Those who deserved recognition given their due.

Faithful to its promise, The Post makes no attempt to identify the defender of tradition who arose to defend breeding and birth above the clothing of the upstarts. After all, she said there are few as old as she, and the ancient have their rights.

The names will be given to Chairman George Angus Garrett and the secret members of the committee, who will announfice soon the selection of the Beau Brummel of Washington for 1934.

Bachrach Photo.
H. L. RUST, JR.

Mr. Garrett left Washington yesterday to meet his daughter on her arrival in New York from Europe. He took with him a list containing those selected by the other members of the committee. The final choice of the jury will be announced early next week in The Post.

Another Washington grande dame, who refused to allow use of her name, looked down her lorgnette yesterday in scrutiny of the list of names already published.

"Mr. Garrett will be very fair, I am sure," she said. "But really I do not understand why no one has set down the name of Sir Ronald Lindsay, our Ambassador from Great Britain. In spite of his height, he always looks well turned out. Always well dressed, he wears his clothes with British ease at country house party or at formal function.

"Then, of course," this conservative dictator continued, "you must not forget the 'British boys,' Leander McCormick-Goodhart and the dashing Mr. I. A. D. Wilson-Young."

Turning to Some Others.

Righto! They should be mentioned, and they are. Cheerio! And now we must toddle along to others, such as the Portugese Minister, Dr. Jao Antonio de Bianchi, "whose aristocratic bearing," The Post was informed reliably, "is so well set off by his impeccable taste in raiment."

The army of Community Chest workers has risen en masse in favor of their handsome, popular and well-dressed campaign chairman, Hal Rust, jr., who led them in their recent drive.

And then there is Judge Peyton Gordon, best dressed of the District's jurists, and Frank Hogan, who received a large vote yesterday among members of the bar.

The Treasury Department offered T. Jefferson Coolidge, Undersecretary, of Boston, whose good taste gives the lie to Percy Mark's famous remark that "to be well dressed in Boston smacks of indecency." From the House of Representatives came a plea for the departing Fred Britten, of Illinois, and for Robert Bacon, of New York. Leland Garrison, former diplomat, also was sponsored.

New York, Dec. 21 (Spl.).—Men's clothes are emerging from a period of gloom and entering an era of glory, style experts in New York declared today in commenting on The Washington Post's quest for the perfectly dressed man in the National Capital.

Clothes consciousness, they said, is spreading throughout the masculine world, and they expressed no amazement that Washington should possess so many well-dressed men. It may be, they said, that we are nearing the end of depression and that the black-garbed, umbrella-carrying figure, symbolical of prohibition, has definitely been chased away. Men want to be gay again, and mean to be. They are showing it, the style experts said, in their clothes.

According to New Yorkers who are supposed to know a thing or two about style, a selection of the 12 best-dressed men in the world depends pretty much on who does the selecting. If London, they point out, failed to include the Prince of Wales no American who has been striving for sartorial perfection need feel slighted at being left off the list. For the Prince has undoubtedly introduced and popularized more masculine styles than any individual on earth.

Others Are Well Dressed.

The list put out by the United Press on December 15, say the local experts, was a worthy one though it embraced only Great Britain and the United States. There are some well-dressed men in France, say, or South America, who rather fancy the way they are turned out and, indeed, are rather fancied. As a matter of fact, a dozen lists of a dozen each could be readily compiled and all would be correct.

The question also arises as to whether men dress for women, for themselves, or for other men. If that question were put to every person on the list self-consciousness might dictate one answer, self-confidence another, and conscience still a third. Women might compile a totally different list. It is a safe bet that while Adolph Menjou might remain on the list, Ronald Colman would certainly be there, too.

The style experts, however, are not so much interested in who the best-dressed men are, as in what constitutes the well-dressed man. In a word, how does he get that way?

Variety Is New Keynote.

Men seem to be fed up on the idea of regimentation of hard times and have begun to resent looking as though they were all turned out by the same waffle iron. Variety is the keynote of the new styles for men.

Innovations have found a ready acceptance. The rage for the mess jacket and its bright commeband two years ago proved that, and if some men hadn't been a little too hefty around the waistband it would have held its own against all comers. As matters stand, it has been pushed a little aside by the white Tuxedo and the champagne suit.

The cocktail suit was a brand-new creation this year and has proved its popularity in a thousand pleasant places where men gather to forget what they don't want to remember. It is designed in gray, blue gray, blue or brown, with a soft roll lapel. Waistcoats may be of the same material as the coat or of some lighter, washable fabric. Trousers should be a bold black and white or blue and white check. A derby to match the coat goes with this outfit, though Al Smith's brown derby is strictly out.

A. C. Spurr Appointed.

Hagerstown, Md., Dec. 21 (Spl.). A. C. Spurr, formerly of Hagerstown, and president until recently of the Blue Ridge Transportation Co., has been appointed president of the Monongahela System, an announcement received from H. Hobart Porter, president of the parent company, the American Water Works & Electric Co., Inc., said.

Hopes Arising To Bring Back Peach Harvest

Experts Plan to Fight Hostile Delaware and Maryland Moths.

Camden, Del., Dec. 21 (AP).—Hopes that the blighted peach crop of Delaware and the eastern shores of Maryland and Virginia would ultimately be restored to its one-time glory were held out by experts attending the annual meeting of the Delmarva Peninsula Horticultural Society here.

Scientific methods of fighting the diseases which decimated thousands of trees 20 years ago and inaugurated the decline of the once great orchards of the Delmarva area were discussed by entomologists and plant pathologists from Maryland universities and experiment stations.

Dr. E. N. Cory, head of the University of Maryland department of entomology and Maryland State entomologist, described methods of fighting the coddling moth, and Dr. L. A. Stearns, University of Delaware entomologist, spoke on the relative efficiency of insect sprays for use on peach trees.

The peach yellows problem was discussed by Dr. T. F. Mann, plant pathologist of the University of Delaware. Other speakers were H. E. Coverdale, president of the society; J. H. Beaumont, University of Maryland horticulturist; W. H. Johnson, secretary of the Baltimore Production Credit Corporation, and J. B. Hester, soil technologist of the Virginia Truck Experiment Station.

George W. Davis, manager of the United States Reemployment Office at Rockville, announced yesterday that the office is again receiving registration of unemployed persons. He urged public and private employers to cooperate by securing their labor of all kinds from the rolls of his bureau.

He added that men who secured employment through the U. S. Bureau and have since been laid off, are eligible to re-register and have their names placed on the active list.

The Rockville office will be open every week day for registration and, in addition, interviews are held at the Silver Spring County Building at 9 a. m. each Tuesday.

Police Puzzled By 2 Maryland Traffic Deaths

Baltimore, Dec. 21 (AP).—State police today were stumped—at least temporarily—in their efforts to solve mysteries surrounding the deaths of two victims of automobile accidents.

In Laurel, the body of an accident victim, thus far identified only as "D. Thornton," lies in an undertaking establishment where it was taken a week ago after the man was hit near Contee, Md. A transient receipt in the man's pocket bore that name. Officials at the transient bureau where he was registered told police he had checked out some days before he was killed.

A clew to his identity was thought established when police communicated with a man believed to be the victim's brother in McKeesport, Pa. The identification furnished by the McKeesport "Thornton" did not tally with that of the dead man, police said. Unless identification is established soon, the man will be buried at the expense of the county.

Investigation into a hit-and-run accident on the Crane highway in which a 55-year-old colored man was killed also has struck snags. Police said the man must have been struck at a speed of 70 miles an hour, judging from the condition of an abandoned and bloody car found near the scene.

The car was listed to a prominent Washington clubman, from whom Washington police said it had been stolen in September. The occupants of the car fled after striking the man. State police are searching for them.

In a public statement the association charged continual violations of county laws were permitted.

Clerk in Virgin Islands and Employe Guilty of Misappropriation.

St. Thomas, Virgin Islands, Dec. 21 (AP).—Leonard McIntosh, chief clerk of the PWA here, pleaded guilty in District Court today to charges of obtaining Federal building materials for his own use.

The case was a sequel to an investigation by Federal men from Washington into charges of misappropriation of Federal funds and materials by public works employes.

The Federal investigators reported they found no grounds for action against any one except Bruce Snowden, one of the PWA employes accused, who pleaded guilty to misappropriation charges and received a suspended sentence and fine.

District Attorney Robinson subsequently declined to prosecute the case against McIntosh and asked that it be dismissed. Judge Webber refused, saying he would try it himself.

Evidence was introduced today to show that McIntosh, who previously had pleaded not guilty to the charges, had made a confession to Government Attorney Boer, who participated in the investigation.

After introduction of this evidence, McIntosh was given permission to change his plea to guilty.

Bell Assault Case Postponed Again

Fredericksburg, Va., Dec. 21 (Spl.).—Police court hearing of W. A. Bell on charges of assaulting Lewis Brown, Washington newspaper photographer, was postponed indefinitely today on Brown's affadavit that he was too ill to appear in court. Bell is a brother of Edward C. Bell, whose trial on charges of attempted wife poisoning ended Tuesday in a mistrial.

Bell was cited to appear before Justice Henry Dannehl two weeks ago after he assertedly struck Brown with a money bag when the latter attempted to photograph him. Bell had in his hand the weekly collection at the Fredericksburg Baptist Church when the alleged assault occurred.

Brown suffered a concussion of the brain and was removed to the Mary Washington Hospital. Questioned after the skirmish, Bell said he was in doubt as to whether he was being "held up or photographed." The case had been postponed three times.

When Bernard M. Baruch, New York financier, appeared before the House Foreign Affairs Committee yesterday in its tin investigation, Chairman McReynolds (Democrat), Tennessee, asked him to state his name, address and "business," the Associated Press says.

The reply:

"Bernard M. Baruch, New York City, uh, uh—I hardly know how to say what my business is. Off the record, though, I'm not on the dole."

He recently retired from active business.

Byrns Decrees Strict Control By Democrats

House Leaders Say Posts on Committees Must Go to Majority.

(Associated Press.)

Democratic leaders proposed yesterday that their party assume greater control over the drafting of legislation by taking over more committee posts. The move brought quick protest from Republicans.

Representative Byrns, of Tennessee, expected to be next Speaker, advanced it as his belief that Democratic membership on legislation-shaping committees should be increased and Republican membership reduced.

"They (Republicans) have got about one-fourth of the membership," Byrns said, "so why should they have one-third, or thereabouts, of the committee places? It's our responsibility, and we're competent to handle it."

Representative Mapes, of Michigan, a Republican leader, remarked that:

"The Republicans got about 46 per cent of the popular vote in the last election. Those voters are entitled to representation.

"But if the Democrats want to change things, they've got the brute strength to do it."

The Democrats will have 322 members in the next House and Republicans, 102. The number of Republicans and Democrats on committees has not been changed since Democrats took over the House in 1931 with a four-vote majority.

Bandits Threaten Children in Holdup

Three colored bandits held up the Sanitary Grocery in the 1300 block of Fourteenth street northwest yesterday afternoon and escaped with $95 in cash and a 14-pound Christmas turkey.

In the store were three children, buying food and a Christmas garland. They were forced to line up with the store attendants, and a bandit threatened them with his gun. The children were Lillian Thigpen, 10; her sister, Dorothy, 9, and her brother, Douglas, 8, and they live at 1451 N street northwest.

The robbers left an automobile at the curb and covered William Conklin, 59, manager, with their pistols while they took $70 from the cash register. Then they went to the meat counter, where they stole $25 and the turkey from Cyril Kines, the butcher.

After the holdup, the bandits fled to their automobile, and joined a fourth colored man, at the wheel, who sped away.

Dixie Bus Ruling Deferred.

Richmond, Va., Dec. 21 (AP).—The State corporation commission, after an all-day hearing today, took under advisement the case of the Dixie Bus Lines, ordered to show cause why the company's certificate to do business on routes northward and southward out of Richmond should not be revoked for alleged failure to maintain adequate equipment.

Nog or Not to Nog, That Is Question U. S. Can't Settle

The old-fashioned egg-nog bowl may not stand in its traditional place atop public bars this Christmas season, the Associated Press says.

Treasury officials dug out a 1917 court decision yesterday under which, they said, mixing up a bowl of egg nog in advance of orders was equivalent to rectifying liquor, and saloon keepers who did it were required to have an expensive rectifying license.

The Alcohol Control Administration, meantime, held that no Government regulations prohibit the egg-nog bowl. An FACA spokesman asserted those who make compound alcohol beverages for resale must have a rectifier's permit, but that it was all right for a saloon keeper to mix up a bowl of egg nog or anything else for sale whether or not orders for the product had been received previously.

Kingsford-Smith Laughs Off Record

8-Hour Hop From Los Angeles Made to Aid Friend

Kansas City, Dec. 21 (AP).—Sir Charles Kingsford-Smith, requiring 8 hours 13 minutes for a flight from Burbank to Kansas City, landed here late today with a laugh for reports that he was seeking a transcontinental speed record.

With him in the monoplane Southern Cross was a passenger, H. E. Walker, 65-year-old California rancher, making his first trip in the air to reach the bedside of a brother, William G. Walker, of Covington, Ky., who is seriously ill in Cincinnati.

Faced by fog and storm conditions in a radius of 100 miles about Kansas City, the Australian transpacific flier decided to remain here overnight.

Christmas Goes To Press.

Scads of Santas, reams of reindeer, and columns and columns of Christmas! It's in the air! The city room feels guiltily sentimental. Even the star reporters forget that by movie standards they've gotter be hard-boiled.

The woman's department goes even more blatantly feminine than usual and puts up wreaths and bells and holly. The feature writers are concentrating on stories with a decided Yule tang. Nothing depressing, nothing without the happy ending. Man-and-maid, mistletoe, marriage. That's the formula. Even the composing room, for the most part safely wedded, refrains from calling it the bunk.

The art department is working overtime, drawing yards of reindeer and pajamaed children eyeing stockings before papier-mache fireplaces. The elevator man greets you with a holiday smile. "Quite a nip in the air. Yes, suh, this am gonner be real Christmas weather."

And the editorial department, with one eye on national affairs and one on international, forgets for a moment codes, economics, problems and appointments, to commit an indiscretion as incredible as this has proved to be.

What Is Cooperation?

The program outlined by the conference of business leaders at White Sulphur Springs bears all the earmarks of a serious effort at constructive criticism. It is not, of course, a rubber stamp indorsement of the Administration's recovery policies, nor is it, on the other hand, obstructive or negative in tone or intention. On the contrary, it sets forth openly and clearly recommendations for modifications of existing policies and suggests alternative proposals of a reasonable nature.

To an impartial observer, that kind of program seems to be the best sort of cooperation, and the only kind worthy of the name. To judge, however, from the hostile comment upon the report voiced by some high administrative officials, the business men have been guilty of lese majeste because they did not forego their right to criticise.

It is worth noting that Senator Wagner, who played such an important part in framing the recovery act and securing legislative protection for labor under the New Deal, is not among those intolerant supporters of Administration policies who would eschew all criticism. He has, indeed, outlined a plan for recovery which calls for abandonment of certain unworkable features of the present program. To the Senator, suggestions of modification do not seem treasonable, even though they are an admission of existing defects.

Why should business men not be given the benefit of the doubt when they, too, offer recommendations based upon sincere and careful consideration of the problems that confront them?

Good Words For 7(a).

The evasions and ambiguities of Section 7(a) of the Recovery Act have been criticized so harshly by both employers and workers that it is a welcome relief to observe a developing change of opinion on the subject.

The American Federation of Labor recently showed satisfaction with this collective bargaining provision of the act when it recommended its retention, without change, in order to provide for continuous governmental supervision of employer-employee relationships. And there are other significant indications that collective bargaining and recognition of representative employee organizations may possibly have been assisted because 7a is not too specific.

If it had laid down a program calling for the closed shop, the traditional antagonism of the steel industry toward such proposals might have crystallized into an unyielding opposition that would have made acceptable compromises virtually impossible. As it is, however, the large steel corporations, long an outstanding enemy of trade unionism, have at least modified their traditional open-shop position to the point where the recognition of union shop committees is envisaged and the principle of impartial arbitration accepted.

Just because Section 7(a) had to be interpreted, it has been possible to develop types of collective bargaining suited to the varying requirements of different industries. Experimentation, it is true, has led to some definite demands for legislative changes by the Labor Advisory Board, designed to strengthen the bargaining power of workers. However, it is noticeable that the board does not suggest a redefinition of Section 7(a), apparently considering it to be entirely adequate in its present form. On the other hand, there is now little employer agitation for sweeping the controversial clause into the discard.

The record to date certainly indicates that a peaceful solution of employer-employee relationships under the Recovery Act is more likely to be furthered if the law remains vague and general in terms instead of being redefined to conform to a set pattern, or shaped by executive decrees into a hard and fast formula for regulating collective bargaining. The good intentions of Section 7(a) can best be realized by permitting those concerned to work out a solution through interpretative compromise.

A Coordinated Tax System.

The President has directed the Treasury Department to make a study of Federal, State and local tax systems, with a view to eliminating duplications and coordinating tax-collecting agencies. Students of taxation have long been interested in problems of this sort—especially as they affect State and local taxing units. That interest has become more than academic with rapid increase in the evils of multiple taxation, bringing the States more and more into conflict with the Federal Government as new sources of revenue are tapped.

So long as the Federal Government continued to exercise limited powers, it could satisfy its revenue needs with comparative ease. Indeed, customs duties and a few excise taxes levied chiefly upon liquor and tobacco supplied practically all of the required revenue until about 1910.

Up to that time, however, the States and the local governments depended chiefly upon general property taxes, so that tax duplication between the Federal and other governmental units was rare. Then the pressure for more revenue, accompanying an expansion of governmental activity, began to be felt, resulting in the levying of Federal income taxes and the introduction of State income taxes, too. Soon thereafter the vast war-time spending program brought a rapid rise in Federal income-tax levies, and resort to miscellaneous taxes.

Since the war, more States have introduced income taxes; levies on estates and inheritances have spread; sales taxes have multiplied. Taxes on tobacco as well as gasoline taxes—the latter found in every State in the Union—have been added to Federal impositions. As the never-ending search for new sources of revenue is pushed, duplications of this sort will become increasingly numerous and burdensome. Interstate agreements have already provided some protection against multiple State taxes. But practically nothing has been done to prevent the Federal Government and the States from becoming involved in tax conflicts.

The depression has aggravated tax abuses growing out of a lack of any coordinated national policy, and there is pressing need of adjustments to mitigate the unintentional hardships due to lack of planning. Obviously no single ideal solution of the problems created by duplicate taxation is possible. The task that confronts the Treasury investigators is to devise a comprehensive plan showing due regard for the needs of all the governmental units concerned, and avoiding too great dependence upon particular sources of revenue.

Testimony Of Courage.

Of all the misfortunes to befall a merchant none could be more disheartening than a general-alarm fire with three shopping days left before Christmas. The fact that retail business indices show a marked upswing only adds to the blow. Yet such has been the lot of R. Harris & Co., jewelers of long standing in the city.

Washington will watch with sympathetic interest the reconstruction of the building and the rehabilitation of the business. Informal announcement has been made that every effort will be bent to reopen the establishment in time to accommodate the many patrons who are depending on the store for Christmas gifts.

It is a commentary on a much-abused economic system, and testimony to the value of individual initiative, that strength is almost habitually found to surmount the obstacles ordered by an unkind fortune. It is something more than the profit motive which raises the "Business As Usual" sign almost before the ashes of the conflagration have completely cooled.

Out Of Step.

Drastic revision or abandonment of George N. Peek's proposal to barter American cotton for German goods is foreshadowed by President Roosevelt's decision that this project must be coordinated with the reciprocal tariff program. The President is properly anxious not to close the door upon any plan to dispose of surplus cotton abroad. Nevertheless, he is determined that no deal of this sort shall be allowed to undermine the State Department's long-range efforts to stimulate a general recovery in foreign trade.

Secretary Hull is attempting to negotiate reciprocal trade agreements within the framework of the most-favored-nation treaties. His objective is not only to aid recovery by encouraging international commerce, but also to avoid special arrangements which tend to obstruct the natural flow of overseas trade. The field in which such agreements may be negotiated is necessarily limited. If encroachments by a separate agency within the Administration should be permitted, the reciprocal trade program might easily collapse.

Under Mr. Peek's plan, Germany would pay a small premium for American cotton. In return the United States would agree to accept German goods in payment for three-fourths of the obligation thus created. The value of concessions granted other foreign countries through reciprocal agreements would thus be substantially diminished, and their inclination to open their markets to American goods would be accordingly restrained. Moreover, the restoration of normal trade relations would be further impeded by the operation of this temporary expedient.

To have one arm of the Government thus fighting against the objectives set up by the Administration and approved by Congress is, of course, an impossible situation. In view of the fact that the reciprocal trade program was favored by the President even before his election, that it was enacted into law after much study and debate and is being administered by an interdepartmental committee, it is clearly the office of the foreign trade adviser which is out of step.

Simmering Down.

Talk of reorganizing the Republican Party has simmered down to a less effusive but more practical basis. Senator Borah's plan to popularize the G. O. P. by discarding all its conservative tenets is shown to have no overwhelming appeal for the great majority of the national committeemen. Consequently, the Senator would like to elect another committee. But that is a matter for the rank and file to decide.

Senator Dickinson's reminder that "You can't reorganize from the top down; you've got to begin at the bottom and work up," is both timely and to the point. Any party that wishes to remain on a solid footing must respect the views of its members and act in accordance with the decisions of their representatives. Individual campaigns in Washington to map out a new course for the G. O. P. are attempts of the tail to wag the elephant.

At present the function of the Republican Party is that prescribed for any minority—intelligent and constructive opposition. The importance of that role ought not to be obscured by maneuvers primarily designed to win popular favor in the next election, regardless of principle. There is real thought behind the remark of Senator Glass that: "It is much more important to prevent evil legislation than to enact good legislation."

In the capacity of critic of slipshod or unworkable measures, the G. O. P. can render a most useful service to the country during the next two years. And if that policy is ably followed, without petty motives or obstructionist tactics, the reorganization problem will doubtless take care of itself. Neither the jitters, nor resignation to paralysis will help the minority party in its present plight. Effective reforms will come as deep concern with problems of national importance is revealed.

"I am convinced," said Senator Dickinson, "the Democrats will leave enough undone, and do enough that they shouldn't, to give us all the ammunition we want." It will be observed that the note of positive policy is here as much emphasized as that of criticism. In the long run such a position promises more for the country, and therefore for the G. O. P., than factional efforts to bring about revolutionary changes of party policy without close study of the desirability or practicability of such changes.

No Real Solution.

Now is the time for all good critics to get out the old blue pencil and start the merry game of elimination. This is done by carefully selecting the Ten Best. The Ten Best may be shows, actors, books or best-dressed citizens. No critic is worth the name of his profession until he has run the gantlet of favor or disfavor that is the inevitable result of this annual separation of chaff from wheat.

American fashion designers have just come out of a huddle and announced their selection of this country's best dressed women. They did this in a most efficient, business-like way, giving the reasons for their choice in each case. Therein lies the flaw. For if these lists are to have any useful purpose, surely it is that they may be used as a criterion.

But what constitutes a well-dressed woman is made even more of a mystery when one is selected because "her clothes are conservative" and another because of her preference for "spectacular magenta velvets and gold brocades." A second discrepancy lies in picking a young matron whose clothes "depend more on line than detail" in direct contrast to the one whose sole claim to a place in the roster is the fact that her coats are of "gold-dotted net, lace, sequins." Thus the designers have either unknowingly, or shrewdly, left unsettled the moot question of which is the more important—line or detail? So the millions of Great Unpicked still have something to worry about.

Not content with judging modish adults, this council also named John Drayton Cochran, of New York City, as the best-dressed baby. The 2-month-old fashion plate is, of course, blissfully unaware of the staggering honor just conferred upon him. Perhaps it is just as well. It will be hard enough for the average boy-baby, 20 years hence, to live through having his baby pictures shown to interested friends or relatives. But imagine trying to explain to your baseball buddies that you really had nothing to do with being picked as the world's "best-dressed baby."

Rackets—And Rackets?

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Glory be to the powers of authority for the wave of rectitude sweeping the country! All hail to the officials for the present campaign of purity! Gangsters are being slain; racketeers are being squelched; the narcotic peddlers and the addicts are being stopped; "numbers" and gambling establishments are being closed.

But, what about the other gambling dens, the rackets flourishing under the names of boards of trade, stock exchanges, race tracks, trading pools, and the most gigantic of all gambling institutions, Wall Street? What are the State and Federal edicts on these?

Locally, officers perform their noble duty against gambling, at times breaking through barricaded doors to arrest men at the gaming table. The press lauds these efforts and so do I. Yet, when individuals win considerable money on the Irish Sweepstakes, their pictures are featured as the "lucky ones."

The same officials who direct activities against gambling and racketeering issue licenses to fortune tellers, clairvoyants, seers, psychics, or whatever titles are chosen, legally permitting them to lure the superstitious, the ignorant public, into their dens there to be tapped of so many shekels.

Washington, Dec. 18.

Legal Gambling.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Following fast upon the heels of a report that a man was eagerly awaiting the payment of his "emergency relief" in order to bet on the races in a not distant town, came the report that Mrs. Mary Norton, New Jersey Representative, was advocating legalizing gambling in the District.

I can not but wonder how much thought Mrs. Norton had given this most serious question when she launched her theory based upon the false premise, "Let us do evil that good may come."

Can Representative Mary Norton cite any instances where good has come out of evil? Does she know that "the spirit and habit" of gambling are claimed to be among the chief causes of misery and crime today? Is she familiar with the tragedies of Monte Carlo? With the history of the Louisiana lottery?

Through minor forms of gambling as a means of raising money for hospitals, charities, etc., public opinion has become blinded to its evil.

It is high time that those of us who believe in a righteous God, whose "Thou Shalt Nots" form the basis of an ordered and stable society, awake before it is too late and make a supreme effort to instill in this generation the determination to stamp out an evil that "has been the time-destroying enemy of races, nations and individuals, as far as history records."

CLARION CALL.

Washington, Dec. 17.

When, Where And How?

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Many persons are wondering why the newspapers give such detailed publicity to certain information that must of necessity be quite helpful to gangsters and criminals. If the information contained in the paper is correct and is not given deliberately for the purpose of misleading criminals then it must be of considerable help to them in putting them wise to current developments in crime detection and the tracing of criminals.

I refrain from any caustic criticism of what would seem like very poor judgment, thinking that perhaps newspapers may be cooperating with the Department of Justice officials rather than with criminals. I can see how this would be the case if the information given out was given for the purpose of misleading criminals rather than merely for the purpose of selling newspapers.

There are many persons in this country who have sharply condemned the detailed accounts carried in newspapers relative to certain crimes, and certain criminals, and particularly with reference to the giving of information in the papers which would appear to be helpful tips to gangsters and other criminals. Perhaps I am wrong, but there has been so much of this in the papers, and public criticism is becoming so general, that I could not resist writing you this letter.

L. H. DENNIS,
Executive Secretary, American Vocational Association, Inc.
Washington, December 18.

"Crumbs From His Table."

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: I am asking your kind permission through your columns to make my usual Christmas and winter appeal to every man, woman and child to do his part, in proportion as he is able, to help some less fortunate human brother and some dumb creature. It may be only a sympathetic word and a peanut butter sandwich (cheap but nourishing) to a despairing man, a bit of bread to a hungry sparrow, a handful of dinner scraps for an alley cat, or a homeless dog, or a nut or two for the park squirrels.

As for our friends of fur and feather, one need not spend even an extra dime, if that seems too much. Even if not a housekeeper and depending upon lunchrooms for meals, there is still boundless opportunity to do good. It would be a stony-hearted proprietor indeed who would not gladly have saved for you the waste bread crumbs and other clean table scraps.

If, in addition to feeding the alley strays you can personally rescue them, or failing in that, report them to the Animal Protective Association, you deserve to be especially blessed. Even if, after repeated furtive appearances for your friendly scraps, they continue hopelessly terrified, report them anyhow, as we are especially equipped to humanely capture just such pitiful waifs and wish to rescue them as soon as possible from the cold. Calls will be responded to as quickly as possible, emergencies of course, receiving preference.

The Animal Protective Association, formerly the Animal Relief and Humane Education League, on December 8, established its new office and animal shelter at 5200 Wisconsin avenue northwest. The place is open at all times to receive animals, with visiting hours from 9 a. m. to 5 p. m. week days, closed Sundays except to receive animals. The phone number is Emerson 5941. The public is urged to be especially watchful for animals apparently deserted around vacated private dwellings or public buildings, especially in wrecking areas. One of the principal features of the association's work is rescuing animals from such abandoned conditions.

VIRGINIA W. SARGENT,
President, Animal Protective Association.
Washington, Dec. 19.

Those "Safety Isles."

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Now that the responsible officers seem to have been stirred to action to give some protection to the pedestrian on our streets, the misnamed "safety isles" may receive some attention. These have, up to now, been not only a misnomer but a snare and a trap. Those on foot taking refuge in them are not infrequently driven out by reckless motorists back into the lines of moving traffic, and thus into yet greater danger.

The streets are well ornamented with these "isles," but they are far from safe places, as any one will find by watching a few minutes at any crowded intersection.

Very few seem to consider that these isles are set apart for the special protection of pedestrians, or that the latter have any right whatever out in the middle of the street. And right here it should be noted that the time of the "green" at some intersections is so short that a slow-moving, or aged, or crippled person is unable to cross the avenue before the "red" stares him in the face. Even an energetic person can not always complete the crossing, having to give way to motorists cutting across the center.

Obviously these "safety isles" are no longer safe places and should either be wiped off the streets so as not to encourage a false sense of protection, or violation thereof should be rigidly prevented.

UNOFFICIAL OBSERVER.
Washington, Dec. 17.

Roosevelt Relics.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: I am not "answering" the letter recently published in your columns entitled "If the China Lasts," but it seems to me an editorial could be written on the subject suggested.

I think it wonderful that, when any thing new is added to the White House, it should reflect the Administration of the time. In years to come, collectors will cherish a piece of china of the Roosevelt period, just as the Washington and Lincoln period plates are now exhibited.

I suppose it is out of order for us to commemorate presidents by postage stamps, etc. The Presidents' wives' dresses make a valuable historic study. MARY A. LAMB.

Washington, December 16.

Illegal Machine Guns.

There is a Federal law forbidding unauthorized possession of machine guns and submachine guns. The penalty for possession may be a fine of $2,000 or five years in prison, or both. There is now an active effort to enforce this law. Manufacturers of guns are cooperating with the Government in the matter.

In spite of progress, however, criminals of the type of Dillinger and his gang have such weapons and use them recklessly. It is said that some 15,000 Thompson submachine guns were manufactured after the war and, before the danger was realized, 5,000 or 6,000 of them got into active circulation. Many of these are still owned by criminals. Government officials are after them now, but it will be a difficult task to round them all up.

Meanwhile, if the existing law is vigorously enforced, no further weapons of this sort should get into the hands of public enemies. The law imposes a tax on the manufacture and sale of these guns and another tax on transfer. It also requires registration and fingerprinting of all purchasers, provisions which make it possible to check the output and to know where it goes.

(Portsmouth Star.)

The Post Impressionist

The Ketch Fraternity.

Post Office, Saturday.

A HANGMAN, dying in New Orleans, is haunted by the ghosts of his victims. He has been the active agent in "more than fifty" affairs of the noose. So the Associated Press dispatches declare—and, like all figures except figures of speech, A. P. dispatches never lie.

Well, anyway, we could wish for some historian with psychological tastes to investigate the ultimate records of Jock Sutherland, Marwood, Berry and other leading scaffold masters. Many of those worthies had enough notches on their guns to make the half-hundred of this executioner of Orleans Parish look trivial. Yet all the executioners we have either known or known about gave every evidence that they would die quietly.

* * *

Of course, Jack Ketch is the most familiar figure among them. He bequeathed his name to all his professional successors—and to "Punch and Judy." We have always considered his talents overrated, but we do not deny his equanimity.

He botched his biggest job—the beheading of Lord William Russell. There are still extant copies of Ketch's published "Apologie," whereby Jack seeks to excuse his clumsiness on the ground that the condemned "did not dispose himself as was most suitable." Why, Russell had refused a chance to escape and passed his last hours in calm devotions with Bishop Burnet: scarcely the conduct of a man who would wiggle a frightened head! Indeed, Jack was a few years later replaced by an individual surnamed Rose, in private life a bull-butcher.

Nevertheless, Ketch was soon restored to favor and, if not an artist, quarreled not with his duties. He sponsored a facetious broadside entitled "The Plotters' Balland, Being Jack Ketch's Incomparable Receipt for the Cure of Traytorous Recusants." And we know no evidence that his death, in 1686, was troubled.

* * *

Time lacks to tell of most of his fellows—of that personage yclept Bull, who, flourishing about 1593, is the earliest hangman to survive in English history—of doughty Derrick, beheader of Elizabeth's infatuated Essex—Richard Brandon, himself child of an executioner, who gave Charles I quietus at Whitehall—or that Mr. Cheshire, affectionately nicknamed "Old Cheese."

And to mention American names might be invidious . . .

At any rate, these named were an uncoded lot. Of old, 13 pence ha'penny was the Tyburn fee, with another ha'penny for the rope—although custom did require a condemned nobleman to tip his executioner from 7 to 10 pounds. Not until long later did the wage-scale appreciably mount—and then most likely simply because of a decrease among eligible noblemen. Calcraft charged 33 pounds 14 shillings, with 6 guineas for his assistant, a guinea in extras and the cost of setting up the scaffold. Then the law fixed the total price at 40 pounds.

* * *

Turn, if you will, from the economic reasons for passing quietly out of life as an executioner. Consider conscience.

* * *

The official executioners of the Russian Terrors between 1917 and today probably hold the record for work done, but amateur competition was lively, whereas the Sansons had a not very variable monopoly in the Paris of the French Revolution—and later.

Charles Henri Sanson was the descendant of the first executeur des hautes oeuvres in whose family the post became hereditary. He was master of ceremonies when Louis XVI was dispatched and continued in public service until 1795, succeeded by his son and namesake who practiced the profession until followed by his son—named Clement, if you please!—in 1840.

When you reflect upon the period of French history covered by these dates, you will see that the Sanson guillotine-statistics must be formidable. But we can't find a troubled deathbed in the whole clan.

• • • •

Understand us: We admit there is a prejudice against executioners—among nonexecutioners. A few years since, the Swiss Canton de Vaud had its first capital conviction in 40 years—and no headsman. The authorities advertised for bids. They received only one—and that bidder soon withdrew his because his friends stopped speaking to him. So far as we know, the murderer is still waiting.

We even admit the existence of a prejudice on our own part. A man came here with a piece for the Column. We didn't like him. We didn't know why, but we didn't. Then he said he was an electrician. Then he said his specialty was electrocutions: he pulled the switch. Well, his piece was good, but we didn't accept it.

• • • •

So there is indeed a prejudice against the Ketch Fraternity, outside its ranks. But within the lodge, the brotherhood, however it grumbles at its wages, regards its work as worthy. This New Orleans example is the sole exception we have ever come across.

If the A. P. hadn't told us about it, we wouldn't have believed it at all.

Princess Will Revise Europe's View Of U. S.

Rumanian Author, Princess Bibesco, Dedicates Wits to Change "Envious Reports."

By Andre Vulliet.
(Special Correspondence of The Post.)

Paris, November 29 (By Mail).

WON over by America's beauty and by Americans' vitality, at least one European writer here is admiring the United States like "a splendid juicy fruit." Princess Marthe Bibesco, noted Roumanian figure and well-known French writer, just back from her first trip to the United States, is devoting both her talent and wits to crusading against what she terms "envious reports" about the New World.

"Envy," the princess told your correspondent, "that's what I feel I am up against when I try to sell my enthusiasm for Uncle Sam. I am under the impression most people keep a grudge against the United States for being young, resourceful, successful.

"For a European to talk against America is like disowning the flesh of his flesh. America is like a graft of Europe. The new shoot has grown in the richest land, but the mother plant is in the Old World. And the result is a marvelous fruit, juicy and vigorous."

Not anybody can see the United States the way Princess Bibesco did. Her vision was constantly renewed by the resources of an extensive culture.

One morning, a skyscraper would remind her of the Venice "Campanile." Next minute, she would feel as though she were in Florence and she would wonder why, for hours, until she realized that in Florence, too, huge palaces made the streets look narrow and dark. Another time, one of her childhood's dreams would come true, like a Gustave Dore's etching: "The Castle in the Clouds."

• • • • •

SHE felt like a fireman (her life's ambition), when she was rushed through New York to the city hall with a police escort, only to plunge back into ancient Rome when she discovered that the largest city in the world was headed by a short, dark-eyed Sicilian she had seen bare-footed time and again in Palermo: Mayor LaGuardia.

"Roman impression of might!" the princess will tell you. "You are not asked where you come from or who you are. Leaders, like Roman consuls, whatever their races, can step up only according to what they are worth."

Princess Bibesco lives here in one of the most beautiful apartments in Paris, right at the stem of old St. Louis Island, whence the view spreads far and wide over the quiet Seine, the slow river traffic and Notre Dame's impressive towers. Among rare books, flowers and fine pictures, the Princess, stretched out on a divan, with a white bear skin over her long, simple black velvet dress, evoked for The Post her memories of the New World.

"Why is it," she whispered, almost to herself, "that, in order to defend Europe, people think they have to attack America? The two of them can well go together.

"At school I never was able to choose between Shakespeare and Racine, Lincoln or Washington. Why should I choose now between Greece and Egypt, the Old and the New Worlds? On the contrary, it is our good fortune that they both exist and it is my luck to be able to enjoy both of them.

"Remember that marvelous sentence by Andre Gide: 'Let each of your vision's instants be new. The wise man is he who is surprised at everything.'"

• • • • •

PRINCESS BIBESCO'S mind and eyes wondered at everything during her six-weeks tour in America. Flying over Washington, she discovered Greek temples whose names were "Lincoln Memorial" or "Supreme Court." The Capital itself was like an immense The Hague to her. In New England and Boston she found Old England, and everywhere she breathed that crisp Roumanian air known to Americans as "crystal air," or Indian summer atmosphere.

Princess Bibesco, who is preparing a book on her impressions, thinks Americans appreciate the same spiritual values as Europeans, buy the same paintings, like the same music. She was impressed by women's determined look, thrilled by the Eighteenth Century tradition consisting of putting candle light on the dinner table, carried off by New York architecture.

"It is not inhuman," she said. "It is superhuman."

Not only does the Princess speak her enthusiasm but she has already started the publication of a series of "American Portraits," in the weekly French magazine "Candide." This is what she writes about the "Invincible Couple," Lindbergh and his wife:

"Whatever appearance glory assumes, it immediately puts on an air of tragedy; even for that young man, for that unarmed soldier, simple-hearted and clear-eyed; even for that childish couple. Especially so for them. They are more celebrated than conquerors, dictators and kings. They enjoy a universal investiture. Lindbergh represents the only form of victory recognized by all men, in all nations."

• • • •

ALTHOUGH an extensive traveler through Europe and Asia since she was a child, Princess Bibesco had never been in America. It took the meeting in Washington, this fall, of the Aeronautics International Federation, of which her husband, Prince George Bibesco, is president, for her to cross the Atlantic.

During her visit, which lasted from the end of September to the beginning of November, Princess Bibesco was extensively entertained in Boston, New York and Washington.

Tall, a little short-sighted, with a touch of Slavic charm in her eyes, the Princess is a typical example of Roumanian elite's extraordinary brilliancy.

Brought up in France, she had already won literary laurels at an age when other girls are just about ready to start out for their debut. She was barely 18 when her first book, "The Eight Paradises," was crowned by the French Academy.

It may be recalled, incidentally, that Prince George Bibesco can also boast of extraordinary achievements at an early age since he was sent to Persia, on a special mission, at the age of 24, with the rank of Ambassador.

Since then, Princess Bibesco has pursued her literary activities in France, writing originally in French and occasionally in English, which she speaks fluently.

All her books have been translated in English, the most celebrated of them being "Catherine-Paris," "The Green Parrot" and "Isvor, The Land of Willows." In this last one the author accomplished the remarkable achievement of describing her country without ever mentioning it.

Princess Bibesco's stories on royalties of Europe are always vivid sketches drawn from life. She is one of the few writers who is privileged to knowing, or to have known, practically every monarch on the Old Continent. A King or a Queen to Princess Bibesco is just like an old friend to you and me.

Light-Hearted Harry.

ONE of the reasons why the New Deal is much better than the Old Order is Light-Hearted Harry Hopkins. There is a card for you. Sharp as a tack, he is. And repartee — listen, as soon as you say anything he has something to say right back. Really, he is one of the funniest men. He will keep you laughing all the time. If he could get somebody to sponsor him he could shove Eddie Cantor clean off the radio.

BARGERON.

He has uttered so many wisecracks since he has been down here that one can't remember them. Let's see, there was something he said to the Governor of Georgia that time. Now, what was it? It escapes the mind at the time, but it was funny.

The Governor of Georgia said something about the CWA paying so much that the farmers couldn't get labor for their farms. Quick as a flash, Harry came right back.

• • • •

It has since turned out that Harry didn't know what he was talking about. But that makes no difference. He was funny. He always is.

Now take that time Harry said to the Republicans: "Hunger is not debatable." Gosh, that was a scream. It didn't mean a thing, had no reference at all to what the Republicans were saying, but when Harry made the crack all the newspapermen present cackled. The newspapermen hereabouts are always cackling at Harry's cracks.

The Administration has its talents well organized, too, so that at the push of a button one of them or several of them will jump into play. There's Harry for repartee, Donald Richberg for reassurances, and Frisky Tugwell for provocation.

At the White House sits a director, a dispatcher of talents, so to speak. Push-buttons connect with the performers all over town. The system sort of suggests young Theodore Tiller's marionettes. When the dispatcher wants repartee he pushes Harry's button and he just mechanically utters repartee without regard to whether it fits, and so on if the dispatcher wants reassurance or provocativeness. It is amazing how quickly they can respond.

• • • •

Thus it was when the business men's report came up from White Sulphur Springs Thursday. Quick thinking on the part of the White House dispatcher told him he wanted repartee. Harry's bell buzzed and he jumped right up with the utterance suggesting that the business men "wrap up their plan (for a dole instead of made-work) and present it to the unemployed as a Christmas present."

Continuing, he said:

"No doubt they (the business men) have visited many families and know all about these people. No doubt they have visited this office and made a complete investigation. Otherwise, they wouldn't presume to tell the American people how relief should be administered."

What Harry meant was that they "wouldn't presume to tell" him. Because Harry majored in social work at school. He knows just how people will react to a given amount of sugar, just how much starch they need and how many vitamins. He is, or should be the author of the manual for social workers just embarking upon their careers. When entering a strange home for the first time, it says, the social worker should look quickly around for a ball. Then he should roll the ball to the baby on the floor, saying "Tootsey-wootsey" as he does so. This will cause the baby to smile and get the confidence of the mother, study over the years and embracing thousands of case-workings having developed that most mothers love their babies."

Harry is a big-hearted fellow, though. He would give you the shirt off his back—if the Government will provide the shirt.

Boston Inventor Displays Life-Saving Light Here

On the black, stormy morning when the S. S. Morro Castle burned red on the horizon off the Jersey shore, scores of people bobbed in their life-jackets on the tossing waters for hours. Boats came to rescue, and passed on in the dark, floating past the unseen helpless swimmers, who were left to drown because they couldn't be seen.

Gunnar Winckler, of Boston, 33-year-old inventor, musician, portrait painter, high hurdler, and all-around scientist, determined that a repetition of that sea disaster may not reoccur, locked himself in his laboratory and figured thing out. Yesterday he announced the results of his experiments.

He showed a Post reporter a red-orange metal tube, 15 inches long, an inch and one-half in diameter, weighing one pound, which is capped by a small light bulb encased in thick glass and a tiny wire cage. At the bottom of the tube are three small holes.

He put the hole end of the tube in a basin full of water. The light glowed brightly.

Automatically Lights.

"There it is," said Mr. Winckler. "Life-jackets should be constructed so that there is a canvas pocket at the back for this beacon. When the swimmer goes overboard and floats in a standing position in the water in the jacket, the tube makes contact with the salt water, sets up electricity that lights this little globe.

"This light can be seen for two miles at night on the water. If the swimmers from the Morro Castle had been equipped with these all of them could have been found by the boats instead of drifting off to their deaths with boats all around them helpless because of the lack of light."

The tube is constructed of zinc, as a negative pole, filled with carbon, as a positive pole, and the contact of the salt water, as an electrolyte, makes the electricity.

"We've tested this again and again at night in Boston Harbor," said Mr. Winckler. "We've put three men in lifebelts without the jacket-beacons and three men in belts with the beacons in the water. Twenty yards away the beaconless men could not be seen. Those with the lights could be seen for miles.

"The lights burn for four hours. Then, if they're dried out, they can be used again and again, to their limit."

Mr. Winckler pointed out that, although legislation may make impossible such ship fires as destroyed the Morro Castle, there will always be wrecks at sea as long as there are rocks and storms.

Extending his idea, he has planned a lifeboat unit, in which a compartment, built on the same lines as the tube, is constructed on both bow and stern of the lifeboat, automatically securing a floodlight effect the instant the boat touches water. Furthermore, he has invented a radio-sending unit, which would automatically send out a discordant squealing noise when the lifeboat was lowered into the sea. This noise, inaudible to the occupants of the lifeboat, would enable rescue ships, in spite of the heaviest possible fogs, to find a lost lifeboat by the radio compass.

He has also designed possible units large enough to light such a ship as the Leviathan in floodlight fashion. The unit would be no larger than a small room in the hull of the vessel, and if the room was flooded the lights would automatically go on throughout the ship.

Horses' Holiday Feast Includes Sugar, Apples

Through the generosity of Mrs. C. L. F. Robinson, a special holiday menu was served to about 400 horses. It consisted of four quarts of ground corn and oats, one cup of brown sugar and sliced apples and carrots. Mrs. Robinson, through the Connecticut Humane Society, gave a similar party last Christmas.

Duce Fetes Mothers In Population Drive

Rome, Dec. 21 (AP).—The mothers who have responded to Premier Mussolini's appeal for expansion of the Italian population were enjoying a Roman holiday tonight.

Girl Is Honored At Yule Service

Ann Henderson Declared 'Most Representative' in A.U. Dormitory.

Miss Ann Henderson, of Chicago, active in many branches of college life, was elected as the "most representative" girl in the dormitory at American University, and thereby took a leading and picturesque role in the Christmas yule log service in the women's residence hall.

Miss Henderson, dressed in a colorful red and green costume of old English design, lighted candles of members of the senior class dressed in white, and led a picturesque procession bringing in the yule logs for a fire in the huge fireplace before a brightly decorated Christmas tree.

The election results were announced by Miss Mary Louise Brown, dean of women. Representative girls from each class, elected to carry the yule logs, were: Kathryn Brown, of Riverside, R. I., seniors; Kathryn Cunningham, McLean, Va., juniors; Margaret LeMasters, Clarksburg, W. Va., sophomores, and Ruth Humphreys, of Philadelphia, freshmen.

Other features of the ceremony included reading of the Christmas story by Miss Henderson, prayer by Miss Kathryn Brown, and singing of Christmas carols.

Miss Henderson is editor of the American Eagle, student publication; a member of the women's debating team, and is active in women's athletics, playing soccer, handball and hockey.

Food Gifts Sought For Fifth Precinct Christmas Party

Food is the most sought-for contribution at headquarters for the Police Christmas Tree Party at Fifth Precinct, officers in charge of the cheer dispensing program said yesterday.

The police, following their custom of 13 years' standing, will deliver 6,000 baskets to the poor. Already a large supply of toys has been received.

Clothing, food, fuel and other necessities will be given the needy. Officers called attention to one family which was faced by loss of furniture.

The dealer from whom the furniture was bought still is owed $45 by the mother. If $40 is paid the dealer will give the furniture to her. Police said yesterday anyone interested might send his contribution to the Fifth Precinct.

Kentucky Farmer

By Wm. Lyon Phelps

A LITTLE more than 20 years ago appeared an American novel with the title, "The Tobacco Tiller," and if any of my readers can find it in a public library or in a second-hand book shop, I promise them rich enjoyment. The author is Sarah Bell Hackley, of Kentucky.

"The Tobacco Tiller" is intensely local in its subject and setting, and universal in its humor and humanity. It deals with the small tobacco farmers of Kentucky, describing with minute detail the daily difficulties that beset those who engage in this particular variety of earth-toil, toil that requires eternal vigilance. It is an epic of nicotine. The characters have the fun, the sorrows, and the love-dramas common to all the children of men.

• • • •

The heroine, Miss Lucy, whose rough course of true love holds the reader's constant attention, is 50 years old; that is, her slender body carries the weight of half a century; her virgin heart is about 16. She loves Mr. Lindsay with a pure flame of passion, and with a constancy rare in the tumultuous years of youth. This Indian summer pair of lovers are forced to elope, and make a runaway match of it, for Miss Lucy's sister, Miss Nancy, the villain of the story, has kept Lucy under her thumb for many years, and is devoured by jealous rage at the all-too-evident preference of Mr. Lindsay. Miss Lucy has wept in secret so often because of the venomous taunts of her virago-sister that Mr. Doggett sagely remarks, "The wonder is how any person can shed all the tears that she does, and be any juice left in her." But tears preserve the freshness of the soul better than the arid wind of envious hatred, and Lucy's heart is not withered. She escapes from the paternal mansion late in the night, wearing to her intense mortification a pair of old carpet slippers, for her sister has hid all her shoes, and carrying her cat to the wedding in a basket. Her mature lover has put on new patent-leathers in honor of the occasion, "but he's got a risin' on his heel a tack made," and patent-leathers "are powerful drawin' on a sore foot." They escape in a buggy with Mr. Doggett, who refuses all invitations to occupy part of the seat, saying "I do better on the floor whar I can fold myse'f three times."

• • • •

No one can read this story without crying and laughing. Its deep tenderness is exquisite, and its humor is irresistible. Mr. Doggett's cheerful philosophy is more valuable than many learned works on the science of happiness. As he contemplates his beloved horse, named Big Money, he soliloquizes, "Now hain't he turned out well to be a swapped-for plug? I'm a purty good judge o' hosses, yes, sir! Anybody can fool Lem with any old plug, ef hit's jest fat enough, but I can't be fooled much. Marshall, he said when he seed the false tail they had tied on this un come off jest after I left town the Court day I got him—'Pap,' he said, 'you've got cheated! You'll have to sell that hoss for a song and sing hit yourself! But old Big Money, he's turned out to be a right peert old nag, yes sir; a right peert old nag!"

Court Won't Dismiss Republic Steel Action

New York, Dec. 21 (AP).—Supreme Court Justice John L. Walsh today denied a motion to dismiss the suit brought by Norman C. Norman and other stockholders against the Republic Steel Corporation.

The suit was brought on the ground that in a proposed merger of the Republic Steel with the Corrigan, McKinney Steel Co. and the Truscon Steel Co., bankers were allowed to gain control of the Republic corporation.

American Bond, Share Recalls Injunction Suit

Montgomery, Ala., Dec. 21 (AP).—The American Bond & Share Corporation of Washington today withdrew its petition in Federal court asking for an injunction restraining Capt. W. C. Oates, secretary of the State securities commission, from prosecuting its agents in Alabama for alleged violation of the State securities act.

The petition was withdrawn after Judge Charles B. Kennamer had ordered the corporation to present its books and other records to the court for examination.

Trade Barter Comatose, According to Wallace

Secretary Wallace yesterday described the proposed cotton barter deal with Germany as in a "comatose condition," it is reported by the Associated Press.

Under the proposal, the United States would ship from 100,000 to 500,000 bales of surplus cotton to Germany.

Secretary Hull is understood to have advised President Roosevelt against the transaction on the ground that it would seriously interfere with the Administration's reciprocal tariff program.

Soviet Admits Need For Broader Culture

New Communist Civilization Finds It Must Consider Heritage of the Ages.

Russia's political sympathies with the anti-revisionist attitude in Europe were discussed by Mr. Grattan yesterday. Today he points out a similar liberalization of outlook in the internal organization of the country.

By C. Hartley Grattan.

IT has long been deplored that Soviet education, while marvelously efficient in instilling the fundamentals of literacy and highly successful in indoctrinating the population with the Bolshevik ideology, was so limited in the range of information provided and in the relatively slight attention given to what is loosely denominated "world culture." The fanatics, of course, vociferously argued that this was quite as it should be, for all culture previous to the Bolshevik triumph was argued to be poisonously rotten with the nasty ideology of exploiting classes. It would be a contribution to the health and sanity of mankind should a generation grow up knowing nothing about it. There are echoes of this attitude today in all countries where the Communists are still a militant minority.

In education there is a movement to change the emphasis from an excessive concern with Marxist principles and utilitarian disciplines, in the narrow sense, to a more liberal conception of learning. The correspondents, always fascinated by the picturesque, report that the final and determining reason for this shift was Stalin's discovery that his young son knew nothing about Napoleon.

Whatever the truth of the story, it is a fact that while drilled in the broad and general Marxist interpretation of history, little was done effectively to teach the students the facts of history as unfolded in the textbooks with which we are familiar and to make clear to them the personalities of the important participants in world events. This diet of bare bones is at last being changed and if the Marxist significance of Pugatchev's revolt in 1773 is still made clear, his personality and that of Catherine the Great, during whose reign this event took place, are also explained.

SIMILARLY with geography. The overstress on production statistics, on the location of natural resources within Russia, on the Socialist significance of these things, is to be corrected by an emphasis on the cultural aspects of the subject. The nature and cultures of the several continents will be discussed; the location and appearance of foreign cities will become part of the information of the Soviet school child.

In the higher institutions a similar broadening of gauge will take place. Humanistic studies, long neglected, will be brought into proper focus. The young Communists have expressed a desire to know about the great culture heroes of the Western World who played such a part in prerevolutionary Russian intellectual life. This curiosity will be satisfied. The classics of all times will reappear in the curriculum. It will soon be possible to acquire a thorough literary—or humanistic if you prefer—education in a Soviet university. The much derided wisdom of the ages will be reinstated and Soviet schools, high and low, will move nearer to the bourgeois pattern. To persons of wide cultural sympathies this is a heartening sign, but to the rigid it must be depressing as to the scoffers amusing.

The same movement away from rigidity toward a more comprehensive view of cultural sufficiency has affected literature. The dissolution of the RAPW (Russian Association of Proletariat Writers) in April, 1932, marked the end of a diligent attempt to force all literature into a narrow channel, the waters of which were carefully cleansed of all but proletarian elements. "Literary works ought to reflect the fundamental themes of contemporary reality (an indisputable truth, but note what follows) which are industrialization, the collectivization of the villages, the war against the kulak and the middle peasant, the efforts of the Red Army chiefs, etc." This declaration of the principal theoretician of the movement, Auerbach, when coupled with a rigid conception of technique and an equally rigid hostility to influences on the outlook of contemporary writers by the classic writers of the past, considerably lowered the vitality and significance of Soviet literature. Under Maxim Gorky's influence the dictatorship of the RAPW was liquidated, Auerbach was sent to Siberia for meditation and today Soviet literature is recovering rapidly from its compulsory sojourn up an anabranch of the main current of its development.

Even the moving picture, long one of the principal vehicles of propaganda, and certainly the field of some of the greatest Soviet artistic triumphs, has felt the revivifying influence. An agent of the United Moving Picture Industry of Soviet Russia recently arrived in New York to confer with the leaders of the American industry. A basis for collaboration on production is to be worked out and American films are to be shown in Russia. Richard Barthelmess has appeared on a Moscow screen. Charlie Chaplin, Mary Pickford and Douglas Fairbanks are popular favorites. And the animated cartoons of the United States are so popular that the Soviet authorities have ordered the production of cartoons based on the works of such Czarist fabulists as Krylov and Pushkin!

IS all this to be taken as simply confirming evidence of the opinion that the Russians are going soft in a comprehensive way? Not at all! It is simply the evidence necessary to disprove the notion that there can ever be anything approaching an absolute break in the continuity of cultural development.

In the early phases of Bolshevik activity both the argumentation and the action seemed to indicate that the Russians entertained the contrary opinion. The whole emphasis of their campaign was on destroying the bourgeois virus and leaving the field in exclusive possession of the Marxist-proletarian theoreticians. Now they are reimporting, reviving, the cultural heritage of the ages. The principle of cultural continuity is asserting itself.

There have always been plenty of indications that this would eventually come about. The Russian attitude toward technics has been constant and an often described phenomenon. They almost immediately raised machine worship to the status of a state religion. Accompanying this was an open-mouthed admiration for the technical expertness of the Americans, believed to be the most advanced exponents of the religion. This very much disconcerted those febrile intellectuals who had just about concluded that the machine was the root-cause of all the ills of modern life and as the prestige of Russia rose, the antimachine cult in America and Europe declined.

• • • •

THIS circumstance should have given the believers in a cultural cataclysm and a new birth pause, even if they had been unfamiliar with the mental habits and expressed opinions of Marx and Lenin. Everyone knows that Karl Marx was a cultured man in the bourgeois sense, a German doctor; and that the constituent elements of his culture were bourgeois. There is something strikingly indicative in the fact that the preface to the first German edition of "Capital" closes with a quotation from Dante in the original Italian. Moreover, his own contribution to culture was an amalgam of several strains of bourgeois thought. The synthesis Marx effected was original and profound, but the material synthesized was derived from German philosophy, French Socialism and English political economy.

This process of assimilating, reinterpreting and revaluating the culture of the ages is not going to be an easy task. It will not be possible to plan it; and neither will it be possible exactly to predict what the configuration of the new synthesis will be.

IT is highly probable that, because the process of selection can not be controlled, much that is worthless, even according to capitalistic standards, will be carried over and that vices stand as fair a chance as virtues of taking root. Some of the pleasanter vices have already found a place. The state-supported campaign against drinking has lately been discarded and while drunkenness will hardly win toleration, the place of alcohol in social life will be recognized. Any reader of Russian novels will tell you that under the Soviets a pretty girl provokes much the same reaction as she does under capitalism.

In short, on whatever level, from whatever angle you approach the matter, it is apparent that the new civilization will embody most of the characteristics of the civilization we have always known, redefined, reinterpreted but, in essence, unchanged, making possible as full a life as was ever possible and on not so vastly different terms.

Yet it should not be assumed that Russia is slowly being remodeled on bourgeois lines in all respects. The fundamental economic organization and the social patterns growing out of it will permanently prevent that. Russia will still, in all basic respects, be an anomaly in the capitalistic world. If, as interested pessimists and optimists alike assert, the world at large is a long way from Communism—if we are in for a long period of right reaction, internal disorders and destructive wars—we should not be decieved into believing that Communism is dead because the Soviet government accommodates itself politically and borrows culturally from its "enemies."

Bourgeois democracy did not triumph all over the world at one time, but democracy did not die for that reason. Neither did the Democrats go soft when, for the countries in which they had triumphed, they directed the establishment of "accommodations" politically and allowed a loosening-up culturally. The Communists are going through this same process, demonstrating once more the continuity of culture, substituting for the hard ascetic attitudes of youth the more mellow points of view of maturity. Only in lands where they are not yet triumphant are they the sea-green incorruptibles of old. But even in Russia they have not "gone soft" in the invidious sense. Not by a long chalk!

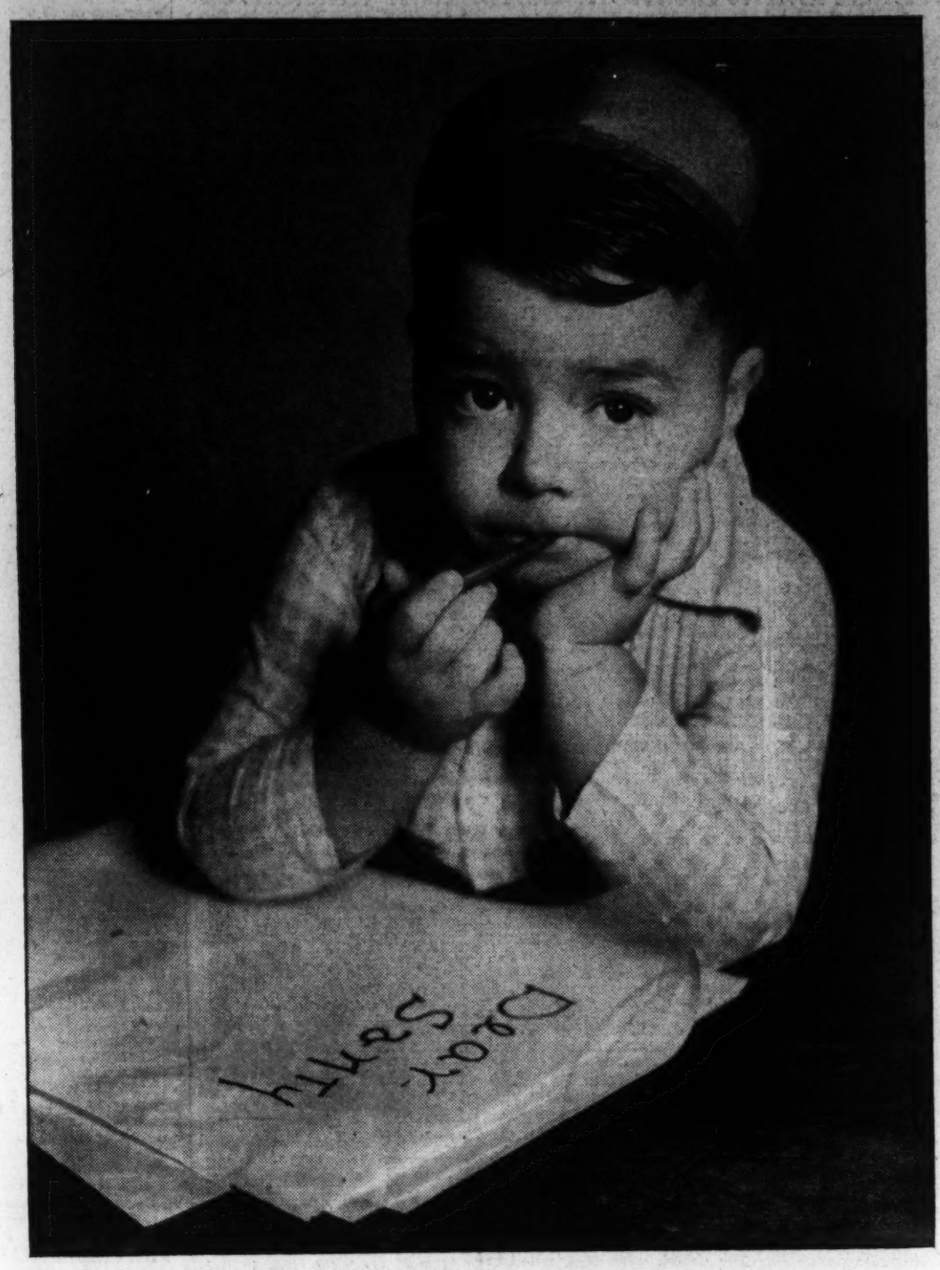
SANTA CLAUS IN HOLLYWOOD



'TWAS THE NIGHT before Christmas, and all through the house, not a creature was stirring—that is, none except Mother, wrapping presents and thinking what a disagreeable taste the seals had . . . Dad, trying to make the tree lights work . . . and the children, squirming in bed, listening for the hoof-beat of reindeer on the roof, wondering how on earth Santa ever could squeeze into that narrow chimney!

THE SCENE? Strange as it seems, Hollywood! Yes, sir, all the holiday glamour this year will be on the Christmas trees, for the stars are going in for quiet family gatherings and good clean fun in general. The film capital has acquired so many family groups during the past months that the youngsters are the most important factor in plans for the Christmas season.

CAN you imagine Bing Crosby warbling carols for the benefit of his new twins, and Marlene Dietrich reciting "Jolly Old St. Nicholas" for little Maria? That's just what they'll be doing—we have it straight from one who knows. Frances Fink, writing direct from the film capital, tells the amusing story of how Santa has taken Hollywood by storm. Read it tomorrow . . . in the Feature Section of The Sunday Post.

Many Envoys Are Greeted In Capital

Dodds Expected Here During Vacation From Berlin Post.

By Evelyn Peyton Gordon.

During the last few days the Capital has welcomed several United States envoys and their wives, who have stopped briefly before going to their respective homes in various parts of the country to pass the Christmas holidays.

The Ambassador to the Argentine and Mrs. Alexander Weddell, who have been here for some time, have gone to their home in Richmond for a vacation before returning to Buenos Aires.

The Secretary of State and Mrs. Cordell Hull will entertain at a small dinner tonight for the United States Ambassador to the Court of St. James and Mrs. Robert Worth Bingham, who recently arrived from England. The Ambassador and Mrs. Bingham will linger only briefly before going to Louisville—for the holiday. However they plan another visit before they sail for England.

From the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics came Ambassador William C. Bullitt to pass a few days here, attend the Cabinet dinner at the White House, and depart for New York before going to his home in Philadelphia for Christmas.

Dodds on Way to United States.

On the high seas is the United States Ambassador to Berlin, Mr. William E. Dodd, with Mrs. Dodd and their family, who will arrive in New York tomorrow aboard the Europa. They probably will go direct to their home in Chicago for the holidays, later coming to the Capital. The Minister to Honduras and Mrs. Julius G. Lay, who make their home here, when in this country, have arrived from Central America. Mr. Lay has recently been appointed Minister to Uruguay. When they go to Montevideo, they will occupy the handsome legation which which was completed not long ago. It was during the regime of Mr. J. Butler Wright, now Minister to Czechoslovakia, that the legation was planned and built.

The popular Minister to Norway and Mrs. Hoffman Philip are soon to arrive from Oslo. Their home on Massachusetts avenue just below Sheridan circle is now occupied by the Counselor of the Netherlands Legation and Baroness van Breugel, but Mr. and Mrs. Philip always consider Washington their "base port," for the former was born and educated here. They will stop at the Anchorage as that is a favorite place for their all-too-short visits.

Wilsons Going to Chicago.

Other envoys who will be in this country and probably in Washington within the next few weeks are Mr. and Mrs. Hugh Wilson, who will come from Switzerland to visit in their Chicago home for a time; the Ambassador to Chile and Mrs. Hal Sevier, who will go to their home in Texas, and Mr. and Mrs. Warren Delano Robbins, who will come here from Ottawa for a visit during the holidays.

Mr. Ralph Totten, Minister to the Union of South Africa, has been here for some time with his mother, Mrs. James Totten, and has been much entertained during his visit. The Grenville Emmets, home from the Netherlands, attended the White House dinner Tuesday and plan to pass Christmas in New York.

The Breckinridge Longs and their daughter, Miss Christine Long, have joined the Capital society ranks for several months and are being delightfully entertained. They will return to Rome after the middle of January.

Season of Opera Opens Tonight

'Met' Will Present 'Aida,' With Rethberg, Tibbett and Martinelli.

There is no scene more brilliant than that of the Metropolitan Opera House on an opening night, and tonight will see the smart motors crowding Broadway; the ermine and sable wraps, and diamond tiaras on handsome women sweeping into the parterre boxes to attend the opening performance of the season when Verdi's "Aida" will be presented with Elizabeth Rethberg, Giovanni Martinelli, and Lawrence Tibbett singing the leading roles.

Numerous realignments in the "Diamond Horseshoe" appear in this year's list of boxholders, as many familiar names are omitted from that nationally famous semicircle. This is the last season of the opera under the management of Guilo Gatti-Gasazza, veteran and dominating spirit of the opera in New York for many years.

One of the most notable changes in the make-up of the season's list is that caused by the death of Mr. Otto H. Kahn, long a patron of music and for many years chairman of the board of directors of the Metropolitan, and another of its guiding influences. Mr. Kahn was always a familiar figure in parterre box 14 on opening nights and at numerous other performances.

The late dowager, Mrs. Vanderbilt, is another who will be absent from the "Diamond Horseshoe."

Mrs. Brainard W. Parker will give a dinner Saturday, December 29, at the Chevy Chase Club in honor of her daughter, Miss Cassie Parker, and in compliment to Miss Frida Frazer, debutante daughter of Mrs. Randolph Leigh. The dinner will precede the dance which Mr. and Mrs. Randolph Leigh will give for Miss Frazer.

Assembly Gives Annual Party At Shoreham

The handsome west ballroom of the Shoreham Hotel, with its crystal chandeliers, gold draperies and dark fringed palms, was the scene of the Washington Assembly last night. At 10 o'clock the guests began arriving and gathered in jolly groups in the lounge and salons to chat and welcome home those on vacation from school.

For what seemed too brief an interval there was dancing, then at 11:30 the floor show started. The first number was a clever dance by the four Tut-tut Girls, Miss Imogene Ficklen, Miss Elizabeth Tilghman, Miss Dorothy Gould Fowler and Miss Mary Katherine Bentley. They were attired in costumes of blue and yellow striped materials made on old Egyptian lines with little flat hats made with side flaps. The following number was a dashing tango by Miss Marjorie Jane Dampman and Senor Regelio Alfero. Miss Dampman had on a becoming frock of white, trimmed with scarlet of the same shade as her slippers. Mr. Johnnie Reyburn, whose fund of songs and stories is without end, gave a few of his selections.

Miss Mathilde Bruce Rodger, attired in a colonial gown of white satin trimmed with ermine, which had been on a ball gown of her great grandmother, carried a tiny muff and wore a pearl tiara on her dark curls in her waltz with Mr. Homer Tatum. This was followed by the Champagne Waltz, danced by Miss Dampman, Miss Ileen Hood, Miss Fenalla Castenado, Miss Mary Elizabeth Shoeman, Miss Frances Wooley, Miss Katherine Brown, Miss Betty Mattingly and Miss Dorothy Gould Fowler. They wore gowns of cloth of gold made on flaring lines.

A touch of comedy was furnished in the clever skit presented by Mr. Forney Reese, Miss Rebecca Tarwater, Miss Helen Ault and Mr. Isham Keith. Following this everyone joined in singing "After the Ball Is Over," "In the Good Old Summer Time," "A Bicycle Built for Two."

The final number on the program was a "Spirit of Winter" dance by Miss Marion D. Venable.

Proper Accessories Demand Attention for Assurance That Man Is Dressed Correctly

By M. A. Weiss.

NOTHING contributes more to a man's sense of well-being than the knowledge that he is properly dressed for a given occasion. For that reason, accessories can make or mar his enjoyment of holiday festivities. Those little touches that at first seem nonessential demand vital attention in order to complete a correct ensemble.

Take the matter of formal wear for example; deft touches such as the maroon carnations to the lapel, the semiprecious stone jewelry sets and the yellow reefers all help to transform what has become a uniform into a dress outfit for gentlemen.

This season brings several new notes in those masculine needs which we term accessories. There is a new winged collar on the market with deeper wings than formerly. The V-front opening is very wide so that a chap with a thin neck gets a break, as do his more bull-throated brothers. It is very comfortable. In fact its high-cut, formal appearance belies the negligee ease for the wearer.

Waistcoats of All Types.

Waistcoats of all types come in for consideration at this time of the year. Now you can blossom out in those fancy "weskits" which are so much the vogue. I particularly recommend the new tattersall types which have cream and canary grounds plus overstripings of red and black. These have a waisted effect with wide inverted V-opening at the base. The double-breasted models are to be worn with only single-breasted suits and vice versa. The choice of cream or canary adds possibilities, since they can be worn with both the navy blues, brown and green fabrics.

I like the new invisible braces which are difficult to obtain in Washington. These are of elastic and fit under the shirt instead of over it. They not only keep the trousers in place but keep the shirt front smooth and the collar low on the neck. The dickey bosom shirt finds growing popularity with the rise of the cocktail suit. It is really the only shirt that combines the dress-up appearance of a starch front with the solid comfort of the negligee shirt.

Neckties Take New Shape.

Neckties take the new Tremler shape both in four-in-hand ties and bows. These are slim and streamlined without the wide flare. Many are folded several times so as to need no bulky innerlining. Spitafield designs made up on dark grounds with combination lines and figures are an important feature of this season. The striped tie undoubtedly will retain its present position of high popularity, but with this new note: the striped knit tie will have horizontal designs changed to bias stripes for those who are fashion-wise.

Brown buck shoes are being worn for more occasions than those of a sporting nature. In fact they have often found their way into the office.

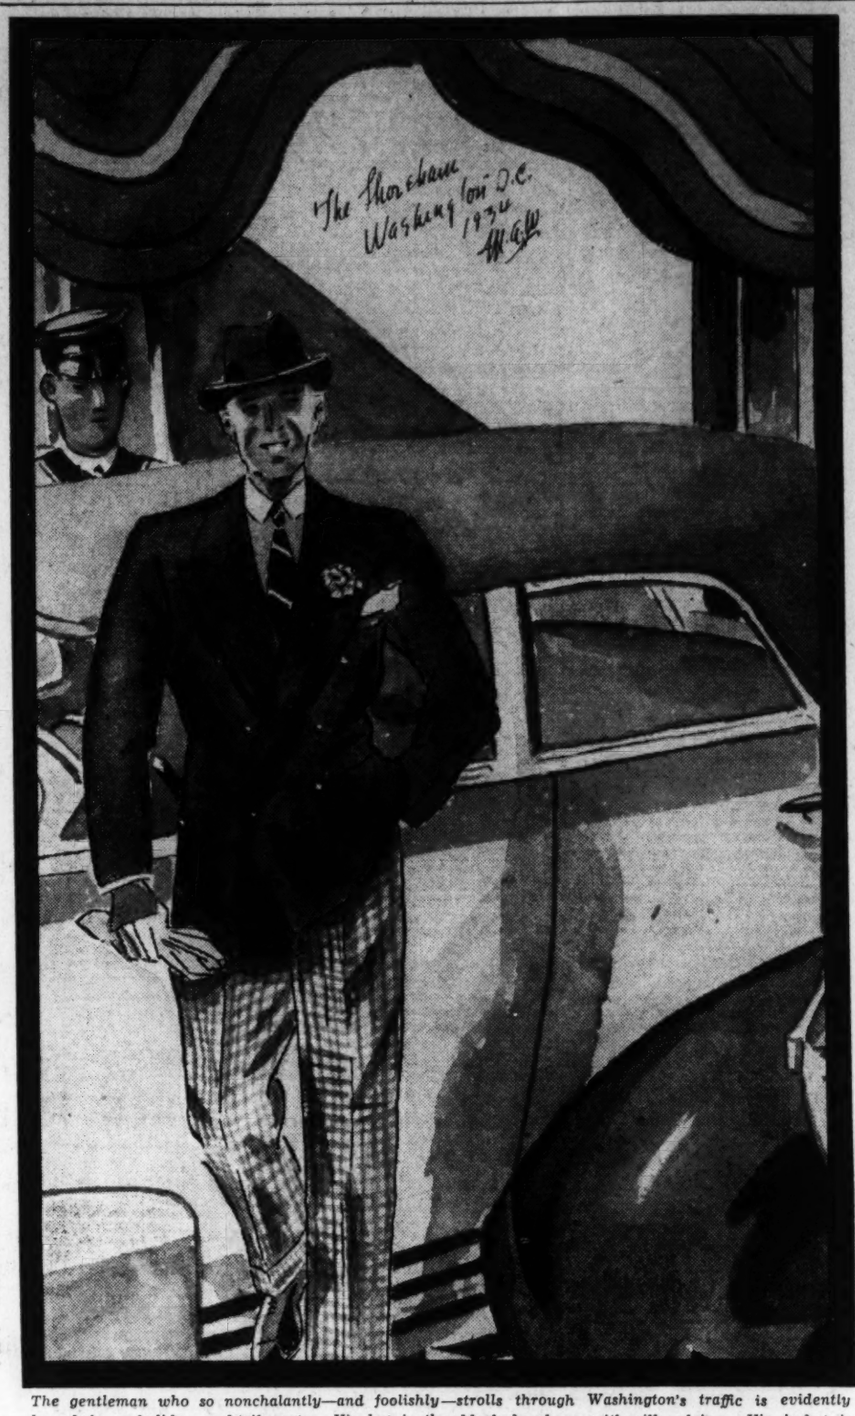
The porkpie hat is an indispensable dress item for those fortunate gentleman who spend part of their time in the country.

One of the most important trends this season (partly inspired by the fancy waistcoat vogue) is the wearing of sweaters in place of the waistcoast for both country and town. These generally are of the short, sleeveless slipover variety. Wine, navy blue and bottle green are the smartest colors. These may be either solid in pattern or of Scottish design, such as gun-checks, over-plaids, etc.

On Carrying a Stick.

There is a smart trend among well-dressed gentlemen toward their ancient right to carry a stick. There is something about the cane that transforms and inspires a more gallant and chivalrous spirit. We will leave the reason for philosophers to determine. The fact is that the walking stick has become a necessity among well-dressed men the world over. I particularly recommend the knob type Blackthorn stick (resembling the Irish shillalah) for country use; the crook-handle malacca and barked ash for daytime wear with ebony or rosewood.

A little care each morning in selecting the proper combination of accessories to go with a suit you intend to wear for that day will be well repaid by the smartness imparted to your appearance and by the confidence inspired by the knowledge that you are properly clad. It's a great mental tonic.



The gentleman who so nonchalantly—and foolishly—strolls through Washington's traffic is evidently bound for a holiday cocktail party. His hat is the black homburg with silk edging. His jacket is Oxford gray in that new model sponsored by the Duke of Kent, which, being double-breasted, buttons down to the last button. His trousers are shepherd check with side welt seams. Note that these have cuffs. His shoes are dull calf with an English tip. His gloves are cream-colored buck. He is wearing a blue chambray shirt with a white starched collar. His overcoat? He left that in the car. It is the all-occasion blue camel's hair model.

A Modern 'Sculptor' Achieves Fame Through Use of Soap as His Medium

By Katherine Smith.

LESTER GABA'S story is one of a young man who carved his career in soap. With this symbol of cleanliness, a few tools, a sensitive pair of hands and an observant mind, he has placed himself in fashion's exclusive Hall of Fame.

But while his soap sculptured ladies grace the pages of leading magazines and his plaster manikins model milady's frocks in New York's stores, Mr. Gaba offers other creations to Toyland, to the delight of American children.

His soap toys, sold all over the country, include the Three Little Pigs, a lovely yellow duck, a Noah's Ark with elephants and camels, a soapy circus, and others. This year he has designed the famous tiny Canadian babies, and the Dionne quintuplets appear on department store counters, all done up in a flannel blanket, their small faces peeping from under little pink lace caps.

Chief Interest Is Toys.

Of all his work, Mr. Gaba's interest is chiefly with his toys. He says: "Cleanliness in children should be encouraged by giving them amusing accessories. No child would object to the most vigorous scrubbing if it were done with a gay brush, and possibly, although I may be vain to suggest it, one of my children's soaps.

Educators would probably back him up, what with the modern cry of "play element is the thing" that has entered the realm of piano lessons, alphabet learning, and now the necessary, but often unimaginative, Saturday night bath.

But his soap toys have other educational values. Mr. Gaba, working on the belief that hidden talent lies under the fingers of many children, has put out a soap sculpture set, complete with a bar of soap, the correct tools and a sample soap animal for the youthful artist to copy. This little outfit might be listed as a new Christmas item, the latest offering to be laid under the Christmas tree.

Perhaps Mr. Gaba's most important contribution to the industrial world is his manikins for window display. These were the outgrowth of his little figures used in fabric advertisements, now familiar to all fashion magazine readers. He has designed some 26 different figures, sophisticated debs, dignified matrons, wide-eyed youngsters.

Young Idea Faithfully Typified.

His first figures were made for a New York store catering to youth. One writer said of them: "Lester Gaba has caught the spirit of modern youth in creating display manikins which faithfully typify the young idea—even to snub noses and pigeon toes. This trend toward realism is a far cry from the older Nice Nelly school of wax dummies."

Later Mr. Gaba created a "young woman" of 50 or so for stores that wanted smart models for older women's clothes.

Mr. Gaba is a fine example of a self-made man. He was born in Hannibal, Mo., Mark Twain's birthplace. He went from there to Chicago to work in an obscure movie theater, painting lurid posters. When he went to New York, only a few years ago, he had no backing. But he knew how to whittle charm out of a stubborn cake of soap. Two people discovered him: One, Neysa McMein, whose paintings have found their place on covers of national magazines; the other worked in an advertising agency and helped get Mr. Gaba his first assignment. It was to make soap carvings to illustrate ads.

Today Lester Gaba is a success. He lives in the Gramercy Park section of New York. He changes the decorative scheme of his magnificent studio each year. Twice a year he goes abroad to refresh his inspirations with the culture of other countries.

Fraternity to Convene.

THE SIGMA DELTA KAPPA intercollegiate law fraternity will hold its annual convention in Washington from next Wednesday to the following Monday.

Ladies of the convention will be entertained at a tea from 2 to 5 p. m., December 29, at Columbus University. Mrs. John R. Fitzpatrick, wife of Dr. John R. Fitzpatrick, dean of Columbus and first chancellor of the university's chapter, Alpha Mu, will be hostess.

The program will include vocal and instrumental selections, dancing and acrobatic stunts. There will be a tree trimmed with candy, fruit, nuts and gifts.

What Today Means

"Capricorn."

IF DECEMBER 22 is your birthday, the best hours for you on this date are from 10:30 a. m. to 12:30 p. m., from 2:30 to 4:30 p. m. and from 7:30 to 9:30 p. m. The danger periods are from 6:30 to 8:30 a. m., from 4:30 to 6:30 p. m. and from 9:30 to 11:30 p. m.

If December 22 is your natal day, you were born in the Zodiacal sign, Capricorn. Capricorn people are usually self-contained and logical thinkers. They have a great deal of self-respect, but very little false pride. Their indomitable will power seldom permits them to admit failure in anything they undertake.

If a woman and December 22 is your birthday, you are socially ambitious. You desire money, not for the sake of possessing it but for the things it would enable you to accomplish. This aspiration will spur you to make every exertion attain success in life and the indications are your hopes will be realized.

If a man and December 22 is your natal day, you have concrete ideas on certain subjects, which, if they can be put into practical practice, should result in your making a great deal of money.

Wedding Gown Like Marina's Displayed Here

FROM one large bolt of material came only eight dresses, and one of these was Princess Marina's wedding gown. The other seven are copies of that gown, designed and made by Molyneaux. These were sent to cities all over the United States to be displayed—and perhaps sold—to an eager American public.

One of these dresses came to Washington to abide awhile with Woodward & Lothrop before making its permanent home with anyone who has $850 ransom to redeem it.

The dress is acknowledged a masterpiece of coutourier art. It is remarkable for its simplicity and elegance of cut. American stylists say its superb lines combined with a magnificent fabric have no doubt set a pace for wedding dresses that will be reflected in future modes.

The fabric of this dress is pure silver brocade, without one thread of white. It is woven in the English Rose Tudor pattern. The train sweeps backward 15 feet.

By Mary Haworth.

DEAR MISS HAWORTH: In a world that sometimes seems beset by selfishness and greed, it is heartening to discover an outstanding example of honesty, courtesy and kindness to children. I hope you can find space in your column to let me relate the incident I refer to.

• • • •

Last evening, on arriving home, my 14-year-old sister told me she had lost her purse, containing her Christmas money, amounting to $2. She felt so badly about it that I told her I would make it up to her.

• • • •

About 8 o'clock, the door bell rang and a taxicab driver, about 20 years old, was at the door when I opened it. He asked me if a little girl had come home in a cab, earlier in the evening, and lost something. I told him she had lost her pocketbook with $2 in it.

• • • •

He gave me the pocketbook, with the money intact, and not only that, but he apologized courteously for not being able to return it earlier.

Although I do not know his name, I should like to take this way of publicly expressing my appreciation to him. O. B.

DEAR O. B.: Your interesting document affirming the existence of unsung persons whose lives are lived in accordance with the spirit of the Golden Rule constitutes a welcome and appropriate Christmas gift to readers of this column. I join with you in saluting the courtesy and character of this unknown young taxicab driver.

New Ghost Arises To Haunt English

Another "invisible monster" is puzzling the superstitious in Hertfordshire, England. Among those who profess to have heard it is one Sergt. A. Seaman, who said:

"About 2 o'clock one morning I saw a great white bird with at least a 6-foot wing span, flying from the direction of the tree. I heard no rustling of foliage as I should if it had come from the inside of the elm tree. But the noise continued after the bird had flown away."

A Hold-Up Signal.

Expert players do not by any means confine their playing signals to the "echo," which calls for a continuation of a suit or for a switch to another suit. There are several situations in which the denomination of the card played may indicate something entirely different. In one of these it is of invaluable assistance in indicating to partner how long to hold up an Ace of an adverse long suit. The proper use of this signal enabled East and West on today's hand to defeat South's game-going contract of two spades.

South Dealer.

Both sides vulnerable; North-South 60 part-score.

	♠ 6 3 ♡ K 7 4 ◇ K Q 6 5 3 ♣ 8 4 3
♠ 9 7 2 ♡ Q J 10 6 5 ◇ A J 7 ♣ J 5	N W E S	♠ 10 5 4 ♡ A 9 3 ◇ 10 9 2 ♣ A Q 9 7
	♠ A K Q J 8 ♡ 8 2 ◇ 8 4 ♣ K 10 6 2

The bidding:

South	West	North	East
1♠	Pass	2◇	Pass
2♠	Pass	Pass	Pass

West opened the Queen of hearts, on which dummy played the King and East the Ace. The hearts were continued, South ruffing the third round. Three rounds of trumps cleared the trump suit, after which a diamond was led.

Of course, West did not want to take the first trick since this could not be a winning play unless South had only a singleton. He was pretty sure that South did not have a singleton diamond since, having showed up with only two hearts and five trumps, he would then have a five-card club suit which had not been bid. West accordingly held off and allowed dummy's Queen to win. On this trick East played the deuce of diamonds. This card seems unimportant, but it was the very thing West had been waiting for. In such a situation, with two or four cards in the diamond suit, East would have inaugurated an "echo," and only with three cards (or a singleton) would he have played his lowest card. Since the deuce could not possibly be the beginning of an echo, West decided to act on the assumption that East held three diamonds (if he held a singleton South could not possibly be shut out from the dummy) and that South held only two diamonds.

After the first diamond had been taken in Dummy, a small club was led, and East ducked (a standard defensive play), South winning with the King and West brilliantly discarding the Jack. Declarer now led his other diamond, hoping that West had the Ace and would "stay off" again. West, however, was not to be deceived, since his partner's signal had made the whole situation very clear. So down on the table went the Ace of diamonds and out came another heart, on which East discarded his last diamond. Declarer, in the lead with his last trump, was now obliged to lead away from his club holding up to East's Ace-Queen-nine.

West's brilliant discard of the Jack had made it possible for East to win all three tricks. Had West retained the club Jack, East would have been unable to overtake West's Jack without being forced eventually to surrender a trick to South's ten. And had West held the trick with the Jack, the dummy would have won West's Jack of diamonds.

West's discard was not quite as double-dummyish as it may appear at first sight. South was marked with four clubs, and since retaining the Jack might force West to hold the second club lead and eventually surrender a diamond to the dummy in spite of the expert handling of the diamond suit. West decided that the only hope was that the surrender of the Jack would not prejudice East's club holding.

Capital Nook Called Home Of Good Food

Excellent Meals, Variety of Items Priced Reasonably.

By Ruth Anne Davis.

ONLY A HANDFUL of lucky people know about the existence of a little restaurant where there is food par excellence.

In Europe it would be a different matter. There ladies and gentlemen pride themselves on their selection and appreciation of good foods and take great pains to delve out any dining room that caters to the taste of the connoisseur.

There in many cases, brilliantly lighted, glistening, crystal chandeliers and flambeauyantly painted walls compensate—or try to—for poorly prepared dishes and abominably balanced meals.

In this aforementioned nook there's little glamour. French prints adorn rather plain walls, loose, softly tinted rose drapes frame large windows. There's spaciousness and on all sides an air of extreme cleanliness. Those who have peered into the roomy kitchen say it is the same there. The equipment is as spotless and shining as a Dutch housewife's pots and pans.

The lively little lady in charge has had years of dietetic experience. She delights in making each meal a work of art. Not a single dish but meets her high standards.

She uses fresh vegetables exclusively, and makes all her pastries and ice creams. Her coffee is a drawing card in itself and one of her pet prides.

One of her sample menus gives a choice of cream of onion soup with Parmesan cheese, home-made tomato juice and pineapple juice. Next, roast prime ribs of beef, or lamb chops or sauted liver and mushrooms. There's a choice of three vegetables from French string beans, French-fried egg plant, spiced pears and mashed potatoes. After this, fruit salad, with French, Russian or mayonnaise dressing. Now decide whether you'd prefer chocolate ice cream and cake—both home-made—or pumpkin pie, or cheese and crackers. The last touch is a tasty demi-tasse.

This menu was chosen at random from among dozens. Each night there is a different one equally good. There's a la carte service, too, at surprisingly low prices.

Colored Fruit Peels.

A unique and extremely eatable table decoration arrives just in time to add a festive touch to Christmas feasts. A Washington woman, who has already mastered the art of preparing candied or crystalized grapefruit peels, has gone a step further now and colors them red and green. It might sound like a simple undertaking to those who have never tried, but this woman, who has a veritable talent for delicacies, confesses she's been working on the idea for months. She wanted just the right red and just the right green. Achieving the red was easy, compared with the green. Sometimes the green would be too dark, other times washed out looking. Finally, just a day or so ago her efforts were crowned with success. The green is a delightful, real Christmasy green, that will add a gay touch to a table.

These delicious strips of grapefruit peel are lovely for placing in the middle of your table between your candelabra. They're exactly the right thing to nibble on after a heavy meal.

Christmas Candy.

Christmas without plenty of nuts and candy would be almost like Christmas without any Santa Claus, but hundreds of shoppers are so busy now trying to find last minute presents and sending Christmas cards that they haven't the time to shop here, there and yon for candies in sufficient variety to please the family and guests too. A local store meets their dilemma with a special 2½-pound box of assorted candies for only $1.49. Ordinarily it sells for $2.25.

The candy has been carefully selected to include bonbons of all kinds. They come in a bright Christmas box tied with colorful Christmas ribbons. Such an offering should meet any demand, whether it be for giving or keeping.

Gift for HER.

Thousands of frantic men are combing the stores today anxiously looking for something for HER. They have been meaning to shop early, as the signs and advertisements advised, but there was first one thing, and then another.

"What shall it be?" moan these thousands whose heads swim as they view the display of cosmetic sets, compacts, perfumes, lamps, coffee tables, boudoir slippers, rings, watches and necklaces.

If they can hold on tight for a second or two they might find consolation in this: One downtown store suggests a five-piece silver plated tea set, which costs only $9.95. It includes a teapot, coffee urn, sugar bowl, cream pitcher and large tray. Or there's an eight-piece cocktail set for the same price which includes a two-quart shaker, a tray and six gold-lined cups.

Baskets of Soup.

It's fun to get a basketful of presents, but it's specially nice to receive one of the attractive raffia baskets filled with from five to seven cakes of fine soap.

'Happy Medium' Dress Fits Many Occasions

Pattern No. 768.

THIS DRESS is a "happy medium." It may be worn for afternoon affairs—club meetings, bridges and teas—because its sleeves and draped neckline make it soft and dressy. It may be worn for informal evening occasions—dinners, theaters and the like—because it has a light top and reveals just enough of the arms and neck.

Economical? Very! Size 18 (36) requires only 2⅝ yards of 39-inch fabric and 1⅜ yards for the contrasting top. A triple sheer with a creamy ivory top and a black skirt is suggested. Based on current New York prices, the finished frock need cost no more than six dollars and a half.

Of course the pattern is accurately sized. It is available in sizes 14 to 42.

Mrs. Hale's Marzipan Recipe Wins First Place in Contest

By Dorothea Duncan.

THROUGH her recipe for Marzipan, a delicious confection made with almonds, Mrs. Grace Hale, 338 Madison street northwest, wins the first prize of $3 this week in The Post's recipe contest.

Mrs. Hale says this recipe has been popular among members of her family and their friends for the last hundred years, and that the recipe, if carefully followed, will result in a product as delicious as the imported variety. Second prize, $2, goes to Miss Katherine F. Wesslen, Thurmont, Md., for her recipe for Indiana Butter Scotch, and third prize, $1, to Mrs. Francis Hart, 214 Massachusetts avenue northeast, for her recipe for Candy Curls.

The recipes follow in the order mentioned above.

Marzipan.

10 bitter almonds
1½ cups sugar
2-3 cup boiling water
2 tablespoons white syrup
½ teaspoon vanilla.

Grind almonds very, very fine. Use prune kernels instead of the bitter almonds if you wish. Force through a fine sieve. Dissolve sugar and syrup in boiling water and cook without stirring to the soft ball stage or 238 degrees F. Pour over almond paste and stir until hardened. Add vanilla (or other flavoring if desired) and knead until smooth. Make "potatoes" by rolling bits in cinnamon, "apples" by brushing the balls with coloring, etc.

Indiana Butter Scotch.

1 cup good butter
2 cups light brown sugar
1 teaspoon vinegar.

Put butter in cool vessel, melt but do not brown in the least, add vinegar, then sprinkle in the sugar carefully and stir constantly until it will crisp in cold water. Then pour the mixture in previously buttered and warmed pans. Nuts sprinkled on pans before candy is poured in makes a delightful addition.

Candy Curls.

Boil three pounds sugar with two cups water over a slow fire, without stirring until it snaps clear when tested in water (about 30 minutes). Turn out on buttered slab or platter without stirring or scraping. Take a little at a time as it cools and pull with buttered hands until white. If different colors and flavors are desired, pull these in as you work. Use vanilla for white, yellow for lemon, green for mint and pink for cinnamon. Have ready several sticks of wood sandpapered smooth and of different diameters, from pencil to hoop stick. Rub these with butter, and while pulled candy is pliable, pull it in thin strips and wind it around the sticks. If it has hardened, warm it over the flame. Set on wax paper until hard, then slip off the curls. These are pretty for Christmas.

Spanish Nougat.

1½ cups brown sugar
½ cup white syrup
½ cup water
1 tablespoon chopped citron
1 egg white
1 teaspoon cherry extract
½ cup chopped blanched almonds
½ cup chopped candied cherries.

Cook sugar, sirup and water to soft ball. Have egg white beaten firm, and turn into it slowly, constantly beating the boiling sirup. When well beaten, put half of the mixture back on the fire and cook to the brittle stage; then beat in with the rest of the sirup; add fruit and nuts. Turn into shallow pans, lined with waxed paper; when almost cold, mark into small cubes. When cold, coat with chocolate and wrap in waxed paper.

Chocolate Coating.

Shave 5 ounces of unsweetened chocolate into a small bowl; place bowl in a saucepan of boiling water and melt. When chocolate is melted drop the cubes into it, one at a time, and lift out with a fork. Allow to harden before wrapping with waxed paper.

Pecan Roll.

3 cups white sugar
½ cup milk, ½ cup cream or all cream
2 tablespoons butter
½ teaspoon salt.

Let ingredients stand on back of stove for 20 minutes. Cook to soft ball stage, stirring often. Add vanilla and let stand 20 minutes in a cool place. Beat until stiff enough to handle. Pull into a long roll and roll in nut meats, finely chopped. Slice in one-inch slices.

Child Chats

By Alice Fox Pitts.

DO PARENTS have the right to sleep Christmas morning, or is it father's duty to rise at the crack of dawn when the children hop out of bed to see what Santa Claus has brought them? There is certain to be a conflict of desires there, but a compromise can be effected.

A Christmas stocking, the red net kind, filled with smaller toys will serve to entertain the children for a while, before they open their larger gifts, and afford the parents an extra hour of sleep. The stocking should be filled thoughtfully, with eye to including in it toys that will entertain the child. A tiny automobile and airplane, a puzzle, a tangerine that can be eaten before breakfast and similar time-consumers.

Hang the stocking by the side of the bed. Let the child know that it will be there, that he is to open it and play with it alone until he has exhausted its pleasures, before he wakens the rest of the family.

I can hear expressions of disdain from mothers and fathers who are convinced that there is no alternative but to rise when the children make their first outcry Christmas morning. But the plan works, take it from one who speaks from experience.

SHY CINDERELLA

By WILSON COLLISON.

BUT in that one look, Colin had seen enough. He was a little startled and when he turned to glance surreptitiously at Jimmie, Jimmie was lighting a cigarette which he had taken from the pocket of his dressing robe. Jimmie looked a little abashed.

Anne poured a glass of water and brought it across to Colin who took it and drained the glass. He handed the glass back to Anne and looked at her so searchingly that she colored quickly and went back to the refrigerator.

In a few moments Colin came to his senses; he turned and walked to the door with a light of amusement in his eyes. He said, "Well, I must be getting along."

Anne Was Alarmed.

Anne stood looking at her and for a moment Lillian thought that Anne was going to burst into tears. So Lillian rose and smiled and said with a little gesture, "Don't feel too repressed, baby. Be dignified, but not sunk."

A Good Picker.

In the hall, Colin silently fastened his raincoat around his neck. He went to the door and opened it and stood in the doorway, while Jimmie stood behind him and glared at him furiously. The rain beat down upon the veranda roof with a sound like falling buckshot.

He went down the veranda steps and along the driveway to his car. Jimmie stood in the doorway looking after him with a frown.

Colin drove directly home. He had had no intention of going to the office.

Shirley Was Interested.

She asked whimsically, "Is everything all right?"

Colin said, "Oh, fine!"

"Was Jimmie up so early?"

"Up and having breakfast in his room."

"Really? That doesn't seem like Jimmie."

"Oh, you wouldn't know him, darling," said Colin. "He's changed."

"Changed? Don't be silly."

"What do they look like?"

Colin took a long breath. He said, "They're beautiful."

"Don't be facetious!"

"I'm not," said Colin. "Wait 'till you see them."

"I thought they were mother and daughter," said Shirley.

Amazing Combination.

"I don't know what they are," said Colin. "It's the most amazing combination in the history of servants."

"How do you mean?"

"The maid is small and dark and pretty—so pretty that she hurt my eyes."

"So that's the reason you were gone so long!"

"I had a cup of coffee with Jimmie."

"Served by the maid?"

"Of course."

"I didn't know what I was letting myself in for when I permitted you to go over there."

"Then," said Colin, "I went into the kitchen and saw the mother and cook."

"Yes?" said Shirley, suspiciously.

"A tall blonde who can't be a day over 30 or 35, if you want to be uncharitable. If she's the maid's mother, I'm her father."

"Colin!"

"You'll got the shock of your life over there this evening."

"Perhaps I'll run over this afternoon and see if I can do anything for Jimmie's party," said Shirley.

"If you do," said Colin, "take smelling-salts with you. You'll pass out."

Anne was flushed and eager and excited, like a child getting ready for a first party. She had the table all set for four. The expensive silver and lovely china gleamed under the lights in the dining room. She had set the table her own way. It was set in a kind of old-fashioned way and had none of the modern carelessness which suggested the perfect servant. There was a bowl of flowers in the center; at each end of the table she had placed tall candelabra with pale green candles in them to match the pale green china and the deeper green of the goblets. The whole table had a quiet, pleasant and inviting look of informality.

Just before Lillian snapped on all the switches of the electric range, she solemnly assured Anne that there was no cause for alarm over the dinner. Said Lillian, with flour upon her arms and some upon her face, "Don't get nervous. Somebody may try to kid us, but just be yourself. We start with crab-meat cocktails."

"Oh, no," said Anne so seriously that Lillian laughed, "we start with gin cocktails."

Might Be Surprised.

"Sure," said Lillian. "But not on the table."

"Oh, you mean the dinner," said Anne smiling.

"Next comes cream of tomato soup, then——"

"Please don't tell me about it. I want to be surprised."

Lillian shrugged. "Maybe you will be. I'm still rehearsing the clock switch lever on this stove. I hope it works in time to keep the birds from burning up."

"Oh, Lillian," said Anne a little hysterically, "it would be terrible if you burned them up."

"Don't worry," said Lillian. "I can always pull them out. But don't get excited if you hear an alarm clock go off out here. It'll be just the clock on the stove ringing the birds, not me getting out of bed."

After that, Anne was too busy with her own work to give Lillian much attention. But Lillian didn't want much attention. She went on methodically and a little grimly with her work in the kitchen.

Grenville Arrives.

Though she hadn't told Anne, she felt that much depended upon this dinner. She went on working steadily, surrounded by mountains of pots and pans, and once when Anne saw her, Lillian was very red in the face from peering into the oven. Lillian said, "The book says not to open the door, but I can't take chances."

At 5 o'clock Mr. Grenville came into the dining room so quietly that Anne didn't hear him. She was sorting out some plates upon the buffet.

He said, "How are you getting along?"

Anne turned and looked at him. His face was flushed from the crisp November wind and his eyes seemed very bright. He was smiling and Anne thought, "He's so easy to work for. He couldn't be mean."

She answered him, "We're getting along all right, thank you."

He stood looking over the table.

Anne asked, "How does it look?" and her voice was so small and timid and birdlike that Jimmie gazed at her for a moment in silence.

An Amazing Girl.

He was smiling. "It looks terribly inviting. It's all very simple and homey."

"I didn't think you wanted the table to look too stiff, as though it were unhappy, Mr. Grenville."

He laughed. He was astounded by the childlike naivete of the girl. He was amazed and oddly fascinated by her shining beauty in the glow of the dining room lights. She had on a black uniform with a white collar and white cuffs; she looked more than ever like an alluring doll. Jimmie thought, "She's so intense and serious about everything."

He said gravely, "I want to warn you about Mr. Belden. Don't let him make you nervous. He likes to joke."

Anne smiled faintly. "I don't mind."

"He's really a wonderful fellow. And his wife is a peach." He thought suddenly, a little chagrined, "I'm talking to a maid as though she weren't a maid at all."

Room Was Rearranged.

He turned abruptly and walked from the room. He went up the stairs to his room. He saw that all the furniture had been changed around. He stood looking about with a smile. The whole atmosphere of the room was different. Why, it was different! His bed was between the windows; it seemed brighter and more cheerful; it actually had an air of distinction. He went over and sat down in the big chair at the foot of the bed, the chair which was turned so that he could sit looking out the window at the swiftly darkening November evening.

After a time he rose and stood gazing at the photograph of Gloria which stood upon his dresser. He gazed at it with a curious expression in his eyes; he walked over to the dresser and peered more closely at the photograph. Gloria suddenly looked to him like a woman he had never known. He took the photograph and opened the lower drawer of the dresser and tucked it away under a pile of shirts.

Wood for a Fire.

When Anne went into the kitchen, Lillian was squeezing oranges.

Lillian glanced up. "These cocktails will make them think stocks are going up."

Lillian said, "I'm a strong girl. I'm not easily tempted."

Anne perched on the high stool. "I found some wood in the garage this afternoon. Wouldn't it be nice to have a fire in the living room at dinner time?"

"Sure," said Lillian. "You think of everything. Maybe they'd like to pop corn and make it a night at Pumpkin Corners."

"Don't be silly," said Anne. "I carried in a lot of wood and the fire's all ready to light. I'll start it at 6 o'clock."

Lillian Was Impressed.

Anne said, "He seems to, but I can't tell. You never know what he's thinking."

"He's a swell guy," said Lillian. "I knew it the minute I laid eyes on him. I'll bet he's been suppressed."

"How do you mean, suppressed?" Anne asked with great interest.

"Well," said Lillian, "it's been my experience that men are by nature kids. They like to play. They get upstage and suppressed and snooty when some woman gets hold of them and rubs the ritz into them and makes them high-hat everybody."

"Do you think Mr. Grenville was unhappy with his wife?" Anne asked in a whisper.

"Whatever I think," said Lillian, "I'm going to keep to myself. But remember this, I have a natural instinct for understanding men."

William Was Eager.

"I understand them, too," said Anne seriously.

"Yes you do!" said Lillian.

Anne looked at the clock on the range. It was half past five. "I can hardly wait till dinner time."

"I can hardly wait till it's over," said Lillian. "I'm dying for a cocktail."

"You take it to our room. Don't you dare drink it out here."

"I don't care where I drink it," said Lillian.

"It looks grand. I got it a little tight in the waist, but it shows your figure."

Dependent on Lillian.

"The skirt's too short," said Anne.

"What's P. A?" asked Anne, puzzled.

"Personal appeal," said Lillian, reaching for a bottle of gin.

"You're crazy, Lillian. If Mr. Grenville could hear some of the things you say, he'd fire us both."

Lillian uncorked the bottle of gin and smelled it. "If he could hear some of the things I say, he'd think I was a new kind of cook."

Anne went to their room to look into the mirror. She put some powder on her face and patted her sleek, dark hair. She thought "I couldn't succeed here without Lillian. She's got so much nerve. I don't know how she learned to cook so quickly. She's awfully smart."

How to Keep Well

Chilblains.

A COMMON word of Shakespeare's was "kibe," meaning chilblain. In "Hamlet" we find: "The age is grown so picked that the toe of the peasant comes so near the heel of the courtier, he galls his kibe."

The lesion is a curious and as yet unexplained disorder of circulation. Cold is the exciting cause, but it is difficult to understand why it affects one person and not another under like conditions of exposure. It is pretty largely a disease of childhood, and the preponderance of attacks will be borne by those who are under the age of 20.

By some writers it has been held that systemic disease may have something to do with the onset. For example, it is nearly twice as common in patients who are afflicted with tuberculosis as in the average of nontuberculous individuals.

In the treatment of chilblains the aim is to stimulate local circulation in the skin. One of the most effective agents is heat applied by means of the melted paraffin bath. A double boiler is used, water being placed in the lower pan and paraffin in the upper. Heat may be secured from an ordinary gas burner or an electric plate. The wax used should have a melting point of about 120 degrees F. As soon as the wax is melted the heat is turned off and the patient dips the affected fingers or toes into the wax, immediately withdrawing them. After a minute or so the wax will solidify, whereupon the process is repeated. Usually, after two or three dippings, an intense stinging that is almost unbearable may be felt. This lasts but a moment, however, and does not recur after subsequent dippings. After 20 or 30 minutes of intermittent immersions the wax glove is allowed to cool and is then peeled off.

Prevention consists in avoiding exposure to cold and in correcting any abnormality of the circulation of the extremities.

Big Part Taken By Agriculture In U. S. History

Dr. Bunche Gives Review in Essay Scholarship Competition.

This is the seventeenth of a series of articles dealing with essay topics in The Washington Post Scholarship Competition, written by social science professors of the four Washington universities cooperating in this project—American, Catholic, Georgetown and Howard.

"THE PART OF AGRICULTURE IN OUR NATIONAL DEVELOPMENT."

By Dr. Ralph J. Bunche, Professor of History, Howard University.

Agricultural interests played the dominant role in American life from the beginning of the Nineteenth Century to the Civil War. Beginning with the Constitutional Convention of 1787, the agrarian populations exerted a significant influence upon the political and economic history of the Nation.

For the first eleven years of our Government under the Constitution the industrial, commercial and financial interests controlled our political life, and the economic legislation sponsored by these groups was often in conflict with the interests of the agrarian population.

On March 4, 1801, however, this political picture was changed, and, under the leadership of Jefferson, the agrarian interests gained control of the Government. Despite the success of the agrarian party, led by Jefferson, the agricultural interests were overshadowed by the pressing international problems with which the country was confronted. It was not until the inauguration of Jackson in 1828 that agriculture began to make its power felt in the economic legislation of the land.

Coalition Organized.

From this date on the coalition of the western reserve and the West with the South through the instrument of the Democratic party, served to make the agricultural interests paramount. The economic legislation necessary to the development of the industrial economy of the North was denied by the control exerted over our National governmental agencies by the agrarian interests.

The Civil War was the result of the inevitable conflict between the agrarian South and the industrial East and North. The agrarian West was forced into an economically unnatural collaboration with the industrial East in this war, in that the threat of the large slave plantations was more immediately menacing than the economic policy of the industrial and financial East. This unnatural affiliation hardly outlived the Civil War.

Immediately after the war the agrarian interests broke with their erstwhile industrial allies. This was indicated in the Granger and Greenback movements and the Populist Revolt.

The Civil War marked the transition of the United States from a commercial to a rapidly developing industrial economy. From the Civil War until the beginning of the twentieth century American agriculture played an indispensable role in the erection of our capitalistic economy. The developing agricultural West furnished a market for the capital and manufactured goods of the industrial East; it furnished the vital food supply for the increasing working population, not only of the U. S. but to a large extent of England.

Agriculture Mechanized.

In its development American agriculture was mechanized and its increasing surpluses served as the export product which constituted the essential means of repaying the monies borrowed from the European money marts to build our industrial structure.

American agriculture, during the World War, was guilty of over-expansion, over-capitalization and over-production, which led it into the depression of 1920. The world economic crisis of 1929 merely tended to accentuate an American agricultural depression which had existed for almost a decade.

Agriculture, which historically played such a vital role in the development of the American economy, is now dependent upon Governmental subvention for its very existence.

Thus, the prosperity and progress of the nation have been inseparably linked up with the condition of the American farmer. No other single factor has had more to do with the shaping of our political and economic history than agriculture.

The Washington Post Scholarship Competition is open to students in public, private and parochial high schools within the competition area, embracing the District of Columbia, Alexandria, Va., and 43 counties in Maryland, Virginia and West Virginia. Enrollments and inquiries should be addressed to Louise Proctor Engle, at The Post, Washington, D. C.

Guffey Offers Nye Tax Report Copies

Pittsburgh, Dec. 21 (AP).—Senator-elect Joseph F. Guffey today telegraphed Senator Gerald P. Nye (Republican), North Dakota, he would furnish copies of any of his income tax reports that have been destroyed in the Internal Revenue Bureau.

The offer was made after Senator Nye's disclosure in Washington that a committee he heads is inquiring into the destruction of tax papers of Government officials, and others, including Guffey, during the war. Guffey served as a $1-a-year man.

Four Get Long Terms In Kansas Bank Theft

Lansing, Kans., Dec. 21 (AP).—Four admitted bank robbers entered the Kansas Penitentiary tonight to serve 10 to 100 year terms, a scant 36 hours after they looted the Linn County Bank at La Cygne, Kans.

The prisoners, who pleaded guilty today following their capture, were Clyde Watkins, Walter Emery, William Carter and Albert Weeks. The $1,500 taken from the bank was recovered.

Son of Bolivian Secretary Gives Auto to Post Toy Fund

Cadette Lozada Also Takes Part in Party Held at Alban Towers.

A toy automobile with lights that stab the darkness with an electric flare has been donated The Post Toy Fund by Cadette Lozada, son of the First Secretary of the Bolivian Legation.

With his two-and-a-half-year-old brother, Antonio, he assisted The Post Toy Fund party at Alban Towers yesterday. Their sister, Carolina, a year old, doesn't go to school, of course, but she sent her contribution of a toy to be given some poor girl in Washington just her age.

Airplanes, books and games were among the toys piled high in The Post's collection for the needy yesterday morning.

Toys Surround Christmas Tree.

The brightly lighted Christmas tree at the headquarters of the National Federation of Federal Employes at the Labor Building, 10 Independence avenue, is surrounded by many toys from the office force to The Post Toy Fund. More gifts will be added when the annual Christmas party is held Monday. The toys then will be sent to the toy fund in appreciation of the part the Federal Diary, a daily feature in The Washington Post, plays in the life of Government employes.

Members of the New England States Society who attended the Christmas dance of that organization at the Kennedy Warren Hotel Thursday, qualified as Santa Claus aids for the toy fund. Each bore a new toy carefully selected for the fund, and by the time all the guests arrived, the entrance to the dance resembled a toy shop.

Today juvenile Washington will wend its way to R.K.O.-Keith's Theater, where the price of admission for the benefit show for The Post Toy Fund at 9 a. m. is a toy. Buck Jones will be starred in one picture, and other attractive films will be shown. The National Capital Cadet Band will play.

Entire Family Contributes.

The entire Todhunter family at 1718 Lanier place northwest for some time have been saving their spare pennies to assist the Toy Fund. Yesterday they turned in $2.11, which make the fund roll just that much nearer the $500 mark, half way to the $1,000 required if all the demands are to be met.

Two little girls, Mary Ann and Henrietta Donnally, 1810 Plymouth street northwest, have been saving their pennies, too. Many a time they passed up the delights of luscious sticks of candy to do their share in providing toys for needy children of Washington. Into a small toy bank went the results of this self-denial. Yesterday they opened it and found $1.97. They brought the money to The Post Toy Fund headquarters at 1418 H street northwest, and little children will benefit thereby.

"I am just 12," said a little girl who telephoned to the fund yesterday, "but I have a younger sister and a brother. I want to know if you think Santa Claus will bring them something for Christmas. I can not come down to see you because I have no shoes and mother says my coat is too thin to go out in. Tell Santa Claus if he has not enough for me I will understand, but I would not like the children to be disappointed."

A little girl who won a doll house in The Washington Post Doll Contest, wrote to the toy fund how happy she is that the doll she dressed is to make some little girl happy for Christmas. "I hope the little girl who gets the doll will like her," she said. "I tried to make her as pretty as I could and spent lots and lots of time making her clothes."

"I can remember many nice Christmases in my past life," she wrote, "and my mother and father have both tried to keep the faith, but this Christmas looks very bad for us." She will be remembered this year without fail.

Ancient Gun's Blast Is Fatal to Boy, 8

Oshkosh, Wis., Dec. 21 (AP).—Samuel Bostwick got down his old muzzle-loader shotgun today and showed his 8-year-old son, Charles, how it worked. It hadn't been fired for 15 or 20 years, he told Charles, but in the old days they used to insert a percussion cap—so—pull the trigger like this and—bang!

The weapon was loaded.

Hunger Striker Enters 25th Foodless Day

Whiteville, N. C., Dec. 21 (AP).—B. K. Cox, 43-year-old representative of the American Home Protective Association, church organization of Jacksonville, Fla., today continued to fast in the county jail here in protest against his conviction of violating the State insurance laws.

It was his twenty-fourth day without food, and he clung to his determination not to eat until he receives "justice in the courts."

Speed Arrests Drop as Police Continue Drive

25 Caught Yesterday as Compared to Thursday Mark of 64.

Continuing the enforcement drive to make the city's streets safer, police yesterday arrested more than 25 speeders. Twenty of these arrests were made by the "flying squadron" of four motorcycle men patrolling the main arteries in the northeast section. Speeds of the offenders ranged from 34 to 58 miles an hour.

Only one serious accident was reported to police yesterday. Patrick H. Moran, 64, 638 Seventh street northeast, received head injuries and bruises when the car in which he was riding overturned at Forty-ninth street and Central avenue northeast. The operator, John J. Foreman, 25, of the 500 block of F street northeast, lost control on a turn, police said.

The Traffic Court docket yesterday morning was crowded with speeding cases, judgment being passed on more than 80 persons. That drivers are already being more careful was the conclusion in the fewer arrests yesterday, as compared with Thursday's mark of 64.

Assistant Superintendent of Police L. I. H. Edwards yesterday gave orders to all precinct captains to instruct patrolmen to "come to a definite and correct conclusion" as to the cause of every accident they report, making a careful study of details before making their decisions.

Roosevelt to 'Come Around' On 'Share Wealth,' Says Huey

'Emperor' Long Says He'll Put His Program Over This Session.

Baton Rouge, La., Dec. 21 (AP).—Turning from bossing the Louisiana Legislature to mapping his Senate plans, Senator Huey P. Long today boasted he would jam his "share-the-wealth" program through the coming Congress and President Roosevelt would support it.

"I'm going to put it over and Roosevelt will come around to it," he asserted.

Lolling in a chair in the office of his political lieutenant, Gov. O. K. Allen, looking tired from the ardor of his most recent special legislative session which made him not only dictator, but political emperor of Louisiana, Long predicted Congress would pass substantially his same wealth-spreading bill it turned down last session.

The Senator was asked about his plans for the approaching Congress session.

"I'm going to be there," he replied.

"What legislation will you recommend?"

"Same as last time—share the wealth. I'm going to put it over this time. It'll be a little different. I may scale the amounts down some."

He said his bill this session would restrict the wealth of any single individual in the United States to $10,000,000 and the annual income of any person to $1,000,000 a year. Huey argues this will permit everyone in the nation to have the equivalent of $50,000 "free of debt."

Reminded that Roosevelt commanded substantial majorities at the last session, and of Democratic Congressional election gains, Long said "that didn't matter."

"We'll do it," said Long. "Roosevelt will oppose it at first, but we'll beat him, and he'll come around to it and support it. He got beat on the Frazier-Lemke bill.

Six Banks to Reduce Rates.

Leesburg, Va., Dec. 21 (Spl.).—Loudoun County's six banks, all members of the Federal Reserve System, have received instructions to reduce the maximum rate of interest on time and savings deposits from 3 per cent per annum to 2½ per cent per annum. This order is effective as of February 1.

Poole, Banker, Files Petition In Bankruptcy

Admits $177,288 Debts and Assets of $47,794.

Stating that he owes $177,288.45 and has assets of only $47,794.42, John Poole, former president of the Federal-American National Bank & Trust Co., yesterday asked the District Supreme Court to adjudge him a voluntary bankrupt. Justice Gordon received the petition and signed an order directing that Referee in Bankruptcy Fred J. Eden hold hearings to determine to what extent Mr. Poole's creditors should be paid.

Through the law firm of Tobriner, Graham, Brez & Tobriner, Mr. Poole said he owes the Riggs National Bank $80,000, which he borrowed, and an additional sum of $17,500. The Columbia National Bank has a claim of $13,600, and besides that there is a claim by the receiver of the Federal Bank for $37,000 for assessments on the stock of the bank which Mr. Poole held at the date of its collapse.

At the time of filing the petition, the following statement was issued by Selig C. Brez, attorney for Mr. Poole: "Mr. Poole invested his life savings in the bank of which he was head, as he had implicit confidence in it. When the Treasury Department failed to license the bank to reopen, Mr. Poole's heavy stock holdings were rendered valueless. He has surrendered all of his property, including his home, in which he has lived for many years, to his creditors, and is thus left virtually penniless."

22 Years in Jail, For Murder, Fails To Dim His Love

Stillwater, Minn., Dec. 21 (AP).—Twenty-two years a cobbler in prison, and now Michelangelo Gentilcore was going back to sunny Italy and the girl who promised 22 years ago to wait.

He walked out of the State prison today to freedom.

It felt "funny," he confessed, to be starting back to his beloved Maria Delando, waiting near Naples since he killed a countryman here in 1912 and was sentenced to prison for life.

"First I am going to my uncle's house at Molinara and I am going to ask Mussolini for a job," stuttered Michelangelo excitedly.

Michelangelo "regrets" leaving this country but the pardon board stipulated he must be deported to his native land.

Haberdashery Looted.

Clothing valued at $827 was stolen from the Mount Vernon Haberdashery at 924 Ninth street northwest some time before business hours yesterday morning by a thief who gained entrance by sawing iron bars over a rear window. Emanuel M. Edlavitch, owner of the store, reported the theft to police.

State's Drive On Drunken Autoists Set

ABC Board Asks for Power to Enforce the Statute.

Richmond, Va., Dec. 21 (AP).—While Maj. S. Heth Tyler, chairman of the ABC Board, was suggesting today that the liquor control body should have enforcement powers, John Q. Rhodes, director of the division of motor vehicles, promised a rigid enforcement of the ban on drunken automobile drivers during the holiday period.

Mr. Rhodes pointed out that there are 35,000 more Virginia cars on the roads than there were at this time last year, and that despite improved mechanical condition of vehicles as result of inspections, more care must be exercised to prevent accidents.

He urged that friends keep persons who have been drinking from driving a car under any circumstances and said general cooperation with the local and State police may save many persons not only from having their driving licenses revoked, but will also save lives.

Enforcement Powers.

Maj. Tyler, discussing the status of the liquor control plan after seven months of operation, said he believed the board should be given "some powers of enforcement if for no other reason than that it would standardize enforcement measures throughout the State. Local units of government naturally have had some difficulty in adjusting themselves to the change in liquor regulations, and if the board were given some authority over enforcement, many local troubles would be relieved and the system would be strengthened."

To wage its fight on the bootlegger, Major Tyler said he believed the board should license retail as well as wholesale purchasers of liquors and be allowed to manufacture low-priced liquor, to be made in small local plants using corn, apples and other materials from the localities.

Such liquor, he said, could be sold at prices low enough to ruin the bootlegging business, especially if the purchaser licensing system made it possible to avoid payment of the high Federal tax.

United States Taxes "Too High."

The system at present is working to the detriment of the bootlegger. "But Federal taxes are too high to make it fully effective," Major Tyler said, adding that State profits are little compared to the Federal profits.

Another suggestion he made in his informal discussion was that beer as well as other alcoholic beverage licenses be handled by the ABC board rather than the State Tax Department. He said the Tax Department was doing a good job but concentration of all licensing in the hands of one agency would simplify matters.

Major Tyler said he was not making recommendations at this time, since the system still remains in an experimental stage, but merely was expressing his present views, which might be subject to change.

Indian Warrior's Skeleton Is Found On Antietam Cliff

Hagerstown, Md., Dec. 21 (Spl.).—The skeleton of an Indian, believed to be one of the thousands who died in a great battle with the Delawares early in the eighteenth century, was found by L. W. Embly, Boonsboro hunter, on a cliff overhanging Antietam Creek near the State penal farm at Roxbury. Buried with the Indian were his tomahawk and two arrowheads.

Embly came upon the skeleton protruding from the earth. It had been buried, as was the custom, in a grave 3 feet by 2 feet.

The teeth were in an excellent state of preservation. Examination showed that but two of them had cavities.

Wm. H. Sheppe, Charlottesville Druggist, Dies

Charlottesville, Va., Dec. 21 (Spl.).—William Harrison Sheppe, 69, one of the city's leading druggists, died yesterday morning at his home after an illness of several months.

Mr. Sheppe was born and reared near Harrisonburg, Rockingham County, and was a member of a well-known valley family. He came to Charlottesville in 1900 and had been engaged in the drug business since that date.

Mr. Sheppe took an active interest in civic affairs. He was a Mason, former member of the city council and served several terms on the school board.

He married Miss Lillie B. White, of Richmond, who survives, with one son, Dr. W. Marco Sheppe, a graduate of the medical school of the University of Virginia and now associated with the Wheeling Clinic at Wheeling, W. Va. Waynesboro, Pa., Dec. 21 (Spl.).—The most delightful of Yuletide customs, kissing under the mistletoe, is going to be more expensive this year.

Maryland CCC Recruiting Set For January 10

1,495 Men to Be Enlisted to Complete Quota; Dates Are Set.

Baltimore, Dec. 21 (AP).—Harry Greenstein, State relief administrator, announced today recruiting for Maryland's CCC camps will begin January 1 and continue through January 10.

The State's quota of recruits, Greenstein said, has been set at 1,495 new men and will bring the CCC units in the State to the full prescribed strength of 3,250.

Although the number of men to be taken from each county is, in aggregate figures, somewhat in excess of the quota limit, Greenstein explained, this was done to allow for rejections for physical or other disabilities.

During the January 1-10 period, only "juniors," or men from 18 to 25, will be accepted. After enrollment they will be sent to the various camps in the Third Corps Area at the discretion of CCC commanding officers.

The counties, quota of men, recruiting station locations and dates upon which applications may be made are as follows:

Allegany, 125 (Cumberland), January 2; Anne Arundel, 30 (Baltimore), January 3; Baltimore, 50 (Baltimore), January 3; Calvert, 20 (Washington, D. C.), January 2; Caroline, 20 (Centreville), January 3; Cecil, 20 (Baltimore), January 7; Charles, 30 (Washington, D. C.), January 2; Dorchester, 30 (Salisbury), January 4; Frederick, 85 (Hagerstown), January 2.

Vote Favors U. S. Control Of Tobacco

Farmers Strongly for Continuing Present Acreage Method.

(Associated Press.)

Tobacco farmers on the basis of partial returns yesterday voted strongly in favor of continuing compulsory control of their crop.

Returns from the referendum conducted in the large tobacco-growing States were meager, but appeared to indicate to farm administration officials that continuance of the Kerr-Smith act in 1935 has been approved.

This was the second referendum conducted on crop control by compulsion. A week ago cotton farmers voted 9 to 1 for that method of control.

500 to 1 in Georgia.

Georgia bright leaf tobacco farmers voted more than 500 to 1 for the Kerr-Smith act on the basis of returns from more than a score of counties. Incomplete returns gave 12,100 for, and 244 against.

The act declares that farmers controlling at least 75 per cent of the total tobacco acreage must approve the proposal to extend it another year.

Under the act, the farm administration makes individual allotments to farmers. Production in excess of the allotments is subject to a tax of one-third of its market value. These funds are used to finance a voluntary crop reduction program and to make benefit payments to farmers who cooperate.

States showing strong sentiment for continuance of the law were Kentucky, North and South Carolina, Florida, Tennessee, West Virginia, Missouri and Ohio. Three central Kentucky counties voted 2,993 to 146. The acres represented were not available.

Virginia for Control.

The referendum started December 8, with county agents doing the tabulating.

Principal types of tobacco controlled by the Kerr-Smith act include burley, flue-cured, fire-cured and dark air-cured.

In Virginia is was announced that returns "indicate that growers of flue-cured, fire-cured and burley tobacco have voted overwhelmingly in favor of continuation of the act," but that the vote in sun-cured territory, where the act has not been in operation this year, "is close."

Two Film Bills Opening Yesterday Are Booked for Full Week, Others Four Days

The Romance of An Indian Girl Shown at Earle

Sylvia Sidney Is Its Star; Screen Operetta at Fox; the Four-Day Bills.

"BEHOLD MY WIFE." Paramount picturization of Sir Gilbert Parker's story of "Translation of a Savage," adapted to the screen by Grover Jones and Vincent Lawrence, starring Sylvia Sidney, with Gene Raymond, H. B. Warner, Laura Hope Crews, Juliette Compton, Monroe Owsley and Eric Blore. Directed by Mitchell Leisen. Reviewed Friday afternoon.

By Nelson B. Bell.

With a little effective refurbishment here and there, this is the familiar recital of the perplexities that attend every theatrical attempt to harmonize the racial differences between the redskin and the white man. The genders have been reversed from those of the usual formula but the possibilities for melodrama incident and hectic climaxes have neither been ignored nor slighted. The action is initiated with a suicide, progresses through an accidental shooting and culminates in murder!

Despite the implication, "Behold My Wife" is not a "Western." It is, on the contrary, a fable which for the most part centers in the gold-plated purlieus of the very rich and concerns itself principally with the abortive effort of a bibulous young man to bring disgrace upon his snobbish family as a form of revenge for the injustice they have done him in causing his stenographer-sweetheart to leap from a high window to her death as a penalty for her lowly birth.

Plots Deep Revenge.

After a fiery scene with his father, mother and sister, the only son of the family drinks his way to the Far West where he encounters an Indian girl, Tonita, and her "boy friend," an ample buck, who indulges in a little unfortunate target practice under the stimulation of a drop too much fire water. Tonita, who, it seems, had been sent away to college by her chieftain father, not only retrieves the bullet from the body of the "no good," blonde visitor, but falls in love with him, as well, and suspects no plot when he proposes that they be married.

Something more than suspicion overtakes her, however, upon their arrival in the East, where she partially fulfills the object of her spouse until, upon the occasion of a swagger party in her honor, she dons fashionable attire and sweeps New York's elite quite off their feet.

At this juncture is introduced a considerable measure of marital infidelity, jealousy, intrigue, recrimination, repudiation and violence. It is all very exciting, but not any more convincing than it should be, except in the matter of material investiture and superlative quality of photography. "Behold My Wife" is opulently mounted, beautifully lighted and "shot" from artistic angles.

Most Beautiful Apache.

In the role of Tonita, Sylvia Sidney turns in a thoroughly competent performance, although her natural endowments lend themselves more readily to the splendors of smart New York life than to the primitive discomforts of the Western reservations. She is easily the world's most beautiful Apache and one of the few of the cinema's stars who can wear her hair parted in the middle and combed tightly over her ears and still be lovely.

Gene Raymond, within the limitations of a role that has a little too much of the cad written into it, contributes one of his better portrayals and takes rank as what might be described as the present-day Eugene O'Brien, what with his too-high dress collars and all!

The supporting cast includes many distinguished artists whose capabilities far exceed the material to which they are devoted. Among these may be mentioned H. B. Warner and Laura Hope Crews, as Mr. Raymond's fictional parents; Julfette Compton, as his sister; Monroe Owsley, a worse cad than his vengeful rival; Eric Blore, Kenneth Thomson and numerous others.

Stage Bill and Auxiliaries.

Johnny Marvin, veteran of vaudeville, musical comedy and radio, headlines the vaudeville portion of the Christmas bill as a "lonesome cowboy," devoting his major attention to ballads of the range with occasional excursions into the field of the hill billy. Mr. Marvin has developed into an habitual yodeler. Personally, we could do with a little less of the Swiss vocal trickery. Johnny is assisted on this trip by Brother Frankie, who is by way of being a bit of a comedian as well as singer and instrumentalist. The boys went over in a large way yesterday afternoon.

Others among the week's living artists, introduced by the inpeccably gowned Miss Audrey Sieber, are the Liazeed Demnati Troupe of 12 Arabian acrobats, gymnasts and tumblers, who revive memories of Ali Ben Hassan; Fred Reynolds and Allie White, who repeat their musical nonsense and explosive comedy, and Nina Olivette, assisted by Murray and King, in a demonstration of how not to grow old, which, in this instance, takes the form of a whirlwind interval of wild dancing and insane comedy.

Loew's Fox

"MUSIC IN THE AIR." Fox picturization of the comedy operetta by Jerome Kern and Oscar Hammerstein 2d, co-starring Gloria Swanson and John Boles, with Douglass Montgomery, June Lang, Al Shean, Reginald Owen, Joseph Cawthorn, Sara Haden and Joe Frosty. Directed by Joe May. Reviewed Friday morning.

Although the temperamentalism of the composers, authors, tenors and prima donnae who dedicate their various arts and artifices to the light musical stage is extravagantly overwritten and overplayed in this screen adaptation of one of the most successful works of a distinguished partnership, there can be no discounting the lilting beauty of Jerome Kern's music, much of which it retains.

One becomes insufferably bored by the rantings and ravings of Miss Gloria Swanson and Mr. John Boles. Bored, that is, until they burst into song—as they usually do, strange to say, when at the height of their nastiest tempers. The heavily accented observations of Reginald Owen, as the publisher and producer; the suppliant expostulations of Al Shean, a disappointed composer from the cutskirts of Munich, and Joseph Cawthorn's ponderuos philosophy of the theater and its professional protagonists fail to galvanize the intervals of the comic operetta that are not set to music.

A Talented Newcomer.

There is one burlesqued number in which the author attempts to outline the story of his libretto that is genuinely amusing. There are, too, the ingenuous and thoroughly convincing performances by June Lang, a newcomer of exquisite blonde beauty and a splendid soprano voice, as the young country lovers who are temporarily separated by the odd temptations of the large city, to lend a little greater degree of believability to the screen version of "Music in the Air" than it otherwise would possess.

Miss Swanson betrays the consequences of a long absence from the screen in both the staccato quality of her acting and the unevenness of her singing. At times she is very, very good; again she reflects none of the polish that might be expected to accrue from her extensive experience. It will be recalled that John Boles' first screen assignment was as leading man with Miss Swanson in "The Loves of Sonya," the picture that opened the old Roxy Theater in New York at a rental price of $50,000 for the dedicatory week. Mr. Boles, otherwise than vocally, is not too admirably equipped for the farcical comedy sort of thing called for by the part of the composer-singer-lover.

Is Story of Theater.

The story of "Music in the Air" is entirely of the theater and its people and possesses the rare novelty of a twist of plot that makes the amateur rushed into the prima donna role of a pretentious musical production an abject failure instead of the traditional overnight sensation. Miss Lang appears in the role of this ambitious young woman who realizes her mistake before it is too late and Mr. Montgomery is cast as her young school teacher-mountain climber sweetheart who wins in the end, despite Miss Swanson's mild infatuation and Mr. Boles' interest in Sieglinde.

The picture is produced on a lavish scale and is presented against a magnificent background of rugged mountain scenery and ornate interiors. Among the songs which have been retained from the original Kern score are "I've Told Every Little Star," "One More Dance," "The Song Is You," "We Belong Together" and "There Is a Hill Beyond a Hill." The vocal interpolations and chorals are, for the most part, extremely well sung and recorded and a rich orchestration adds still further to the film's auricular charm.

Stage Bill and Accessories.

Charlie Tobias, acting as master of ceremonies; Gerald Marks, Al Sherman, Murray Mencher and Al Lewis, "The Songwriters on Parade," playing the first week of a new tour, headline the stage portion of the Christmas program and at yesterday's first performance scored an unequivocal hit with popular compositions of their own authorship. Al Sherman, Murray Mencher and Gerald Marks preside at three grand pianos during the goings-on.

Owing to circumstances which will not prevail again during the week, the act of Lucille Page and Buster West, in which Charlie Eaton was supposed to participate, went slightly awry at yesterday's first show and will be caught again before any estimate is placed upon it, beyond the known fact that both Miss Page and Mr. West are ace dancers in their respective fields.

Bobby May, harmonica soloist and juggler extraordinary, offers an amazing interval of dexterity, and Jean Devereaux, assisted by Foy, Tucker and Johnson, two girls and a boy, and Jack Seymour, tap dancer par excellence, contribute a "Dance Divertissement" of unusual variety and excellence.

The Fox Movietone News, in its expanded form, and Prof. Lampkin's "Christmas Fantasy" overture round out a bill that is quite in the gay spirit of the Yuletide, with its illuminated Christmas trees on both sides of the proscenium and everything.

Lucky Film Player! Lucky Pup!

Virginia Reid, young screen player pictured above, received two handsome presents on the same day. One was a renewal of her contract with the RKO-Radio studio; the other, the Irish terrier with which she is photographed. Circumstances being what they were, Miss Reid promptly named her pooch RKO-Reilly. The name seems to please them both, judging from the smiles!

RKO-Keith's

"KENTUCKY KERNELS." RKO-Radio picturization of a story, with music and lyrics all by Harry Ruby, Bert Kalmar and Fred Guiol, costarring Bert Wheeler and Robert Woolsey, with Mary Carlisle, Noah Beery and "Spanky" McFarland. Directed by George Stevens. Reviewed Friday evening by W. A. Whitney.

If there is anything you want to know further than the fact that these Kentucky kernels are none other than your old friends Bert Wheeler and Bob Woolsey, just ruminate for a moment upon the possibilities that are presented. If you can not satisfactorily guess it all, then hie to RKO-Keith's. It's all grand hilarity, in spite of the fact that there is no great effort made to be original.

But then again, perhaps that is too severe, for RKO-Radio has one thing new—it has added "Spanky" McFarland to the cast, and, accordingly, the comedy possibilities are increased 100 per cent. Indeed, precocious Spanky can truly think up more things to do than both the estimable Messrs. Wheeler and Woolsey.

Spanky, it seems, has fallen heir to the Wakefield fortune, and forthwith Elmer and Willie take him to Kentucky to claim his legacy. There, they find themselves in the midst of a furious feud, with the Wilsons on the other side. Naturally, Willie has to fall in love with Gloria Wilson and the No. 1 Wilson was and still is in love with the ranking Wakefield, Aunt Hannah.

Ends in Battle Royal.

The reconciliation party breaks up in a battle royal and the story goes on at break-neck speed until sufficient time has elapsed to write "finis" to another mad chapter in the joint career of Wheeler and Woolsey.

Replacing Dorothy Lee is Mary Carlisle, who makes a charming daughter of the South. Noah Beery and Lucille La Verne furnish the very minor and supplementary romance.

It is all better than it may sound, but do not expect too much music, for the Messrs. Ruby and Kalmar wrote but one real ditty, "One Little Kiss," but in the singing of it the entire roster of principals take part.

What the supporting program lacks in length is compensated for in entertainment value. Columbia Picture's Color Rhapsody, "Babes at Sea," is a delightful whimsy of "Water Baby Land" in iridescent colors. Pathe News presents solely a survey of the outstanding events of 1934 that is amazing because of the great number of momentous events the camera caught during the past twelvemonth.

Palace

"IT'S A GIFT." Paramount picturization of a story by Charles Bogle and J. P. McEvoy, adapted to the screen by Jack Cunningham, starring W. C. Fields, with Katherine Howard, Tammany Young, Baby LeRoy, Jean Rouverol, Morgan Wallace, Charles Sellon Diana Lewis, T. Roy Barnes and Del Henderson. Directed by Norman McLeod. Reviewed Friday morning by Isabel Harraman Mangum.

Harold Bissonet (pronounced Bison-ay by the redoubtable Mrs. Bissonet) is the proprietor of a corner grocery store, the absent-minded recipient of woes innumerable, the patient object of Mrs. Bissonet's discontented tirades and the dream-owner of a dream orange grove in far away California.

Of course, since Mr. Bissonet is none other than that veteran comedian, W. C. Fields, his woes are screamingly, outrageously funny, his dreams and his trials are a droll burlesque of the actual life dreams of hundreds of Mr. Bissonets and the trials that attend those dreams, and so closely woven are the strands of frustration and tragedy with the strands of hysterical humor that the frustration and the tragedy fail to exist and nothing remains but helpless laughter.

Katherine Howard, as Mrs. Bissonet, turns in a performance that is just too, too amusing; there are a couple of youngsters to furnish an innocuous love interest and a young Bissonet to make the family complete. Baby LeRoy, who is heralded as being co-star with Mr. Fields, appears but briefly. He has a bit of business with a molasses barrel and a hole in the back porch and appears to have lost that adorable round babyishness that made the feminine trade coo with delight.

Chuckles and Guffaws.

While there appears to be no reason to coo over bulbous-nosed Mr. Fields, there is every reason in the world to chuckle and guffaw (depending, of course, on whether you are a chuckler or a guffawer) at his annoyed antics.

The Bissonets inherit a bit of money, Mr. Bissonet buys an orange grove, the family migrate to California to take possession of the property—Mr. Bissonet having purchased it sight unseen. It is all very hilarious and rib-tickling and you'll find it well worth your while to drop into the Palace, park your Christmas packages under the seat, forget your shopping troubles and take a trip to sunny California with the Bissonets.

Edwin C. Hill gives a Metrotone News Review of the happenings of 1934; "Adventures of a Newsreel Cameraman" gives an interesting glimpse of "Marching With Science"; a Paul Terry animated cartoon called "The Magic Fish," and Sylvia Froos in "Three Cheers for Love" complete a generous pre-Christmas bill that will be changed Christmas Day, Thus giving you only three days to see "It's a Gift."

Columbia

"THE GAY BRIDE." Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer's picturization of Charles Francis Coe's story, "Repeat," adapted to the screen by Bella and Samuel Spewack, featuring Chester Morris and Carole Lombard, supported by Nat Pendleton, Leo Carillo and ZaSu Pitts. Directed by Jack Conway. Reviewed Friday night by Dorothea Lewis.

If the "Gay Bride" had only stayed the gay bride and not stayed too long, she might have been almost as much fun as "The Thin Man"—but she didn't, and she did, if you can do with a seeming paradox.

This picture starts as a mad farce about a racketeering gal who outchisels all of the best racketeers and No. 1 chiselers of the underworld. It not only starts in this utterly hay-wire and entertainingly hard-boiled fashion, but goes quite far enough that way to be a completely amusing and amusingly complete picture.

"Must Have Everything."

But its director, or somebody, couldn't see it that way. It only had humor; it ought to have everything! So, in went sentiment and melodrama and at least six climaxes, each with a little anti-climax all its own. The truth of the matter probably is that the fun ended where the Spewacks, who adapted it, left off, and Author Charles Francis Coe, who is very serious about crime and criminals, began.

However, for all its disinclination to let well enough alone and to call a halt, its fun is rather elegant fun, in a raucous way! Watch it for the first hour and leave when the police sirens start to shrill.

Is Cleverly Played.

Chester Morris, who has been, to our way of thinking, too long absent from the good parts, is crisp, authoritative and excellent as "office boy," the racketeers' honest bodyguard. Carole Lombard is good, if a bit fluttery, as the crafty but not so clever gold digger, probably the most conscienceless character on current exhibit. Nat Pendleton is an unalloyed delight as a gangster, rather "like the big dog about the house."

Leo Carillo, Sam Hardy and ZaSu Pitts help considerably. With that cast and grand dialogue, you see just how good this could have been if somebody had made up its mind about just what it was to be.

Screen Souvenirs, which include a 1912 "talkie;" a Tom Howard comedy, entitled "Second Hand Husband," and the Metrotone News complete the bill that will continue through Monday.

Metropolitan

"ONE NIGHT OF LOVE." Columbia picturization of a story by Dorothy Speare and Charles Beahan, adapted to the screen by S. K. Lauren, James Gow and Edmund North, starring Grace Moore, with Tullio Carminati, Luis Alberni, Lyle Talbot, Mona Barrie and Nydia Westman. Directed by Victor Schertzinger.

Retracing its familiar story of the rise of a grand opera prima donna from obscurity to fame, with a generous leavening of romance along the way, "One Night of Love" yesterday resumed its triumphant career in the downtown, first-run sector by returning to the screen at Warner's Metropolitan Theater for a four-day pre-Christmas run.

It seems needless to remark at this late date that Grace Moore gives a sensational performance in this sprightly and tuneful study in temperament, or that Tullio Carminati quite matches her skill in the non-singing role of the young impresario who brings her to the heights. Lyle Talbot and Luis Alberni add humor to a story that is established with some of the most famous and most loved operatic arias that are introduced into the narrative with complete propriety. The story could not be told without the interpolation of these excerpts from "Carmen," "Madam Butterfly" and the rest.

Not to have seen and heard "One Night of Love"—a sterling example of the perfect misnomer!—is not to have enjoyed one of the most discussed film releases of the year. It is supplemented on the current bill by a varied list of short-reel subjects and full newsreel.

State Gasoline Tax Mounts by $1,550,000

Richmond, Va., Dec. 21. (AP).—A gain of $160,000 in November over the same month a year ago brought State gasoline tax revenue this year to about $1,550,000 in excess of 1933 collections for the same period.

Revenue for the eleven months this year was reported by Howard Smith, auditor of the division of motor vehicles, as $12,259,005.55, compared with $10,714,330.91 for the same period last year, and with $11,679,511.42 for the entire 1933 calendar year. This sets an all-time record for Virginia gas tax collections, although the month of December remains to be reported.

Reich Girl Globe Flier Lands Here for Visit

Elly Beinhorn, on World Tour, Has Flown Over Sahara, Across Andes and Up West Coast of South America.

Elly Beinborn, who holds the coveted Hindenburg Goblet and a deep respect for America's Grand Canyon, arrived yesterday on her first visit to Washington. She was drawn by 160 horse-power compressed into the engine of her white and sporty Klemm airplane. They took her first, by mistake, to Bolling Field. There a soldier told her that she probably meant to land at Washington airport.

Of course, apologized Miss Beinborn. Whereupon she took off once more, crossed the channel and came down in a perfect landing at the municipal air field. There to greet her were Dr. Johann G. Lohmann, second secretary of the German Embassy; Mrs. Phoebe Omlie and Miss Edna Gardner, Washington women fliers; Chester H. Warrington, president of the Washington Air Derby Association; Ben King, secretary, and a large delegation of newspapermen and photographers.

Flying Since 1928.

Miss Beinborn is an attractive woman of 27 with light brown eyes, a conspicuous dimple and an excellent command of English. Since she began flying in 1928 she has pushed a plane over the Sahara Desert, been rescued from the Persian Gulf, crossed the Andes, flown around Africa and shaken hands with Mussolini.

Her flight along the west coast of South America and across the Andes mountains to Buenos Aires was responsible for her becoming the first woman to receive the Hindenburg Goblet, highest distinction bestowed by the Reich upon its fliers.

She left Cleveland yesterday morning, bound for the Capital, after having visited practically every large American city west of Ohio's metropolis. She stepped out of her trim little ship wearing a blue suit, silk blouse of the same color and a beret-like hat to match.

An hour or so later she was having dinner at the Mayflower with Dr. Lohmann. It was there she told, over the coffee cups, how Grand Canyon impressed her more than anything else she has seen so far in this country, of her plans to write a book when she gets back to Berlin, and with what anticipation she is looking forward to greeting her parents in Berlin. "Howdy mutter," over short wave radio this morning.

Venture in Panama.

Her latest aerial venture began in Panama a few months ago. She flew over Yucatan, Mexico, expressly for the purpose of photographing and studying remains of Mayan culture. The book she is planning to write will be based on that subject and while in Washington she hopes to obtain advice and information from Mayan authorities. Costa Rica, Nicaragua and other Central American countries also saw the smiling fraulein and her white speedster, the rudder of which was decorated with a swastika, before she entered the United States through lower California.

"I went to Los Angeles," she said, "then up to San Francisco and back again to Los Angeles before starting eastward. The scenery was beautiful. And that Grand Canyon! I landed 17 miles south of it."

After a couple of days here she plans to fly to Miami and spend Christmas on a yacht.

New York? She's going to take her time about going there.

"I'd like to see the tall buildings there," she said, "but I don't think they will thrill me so much as Grand Canyon."

Indiana Rallies, Deals G. W. Five First Defeat of Season, 45 to 41

This Morning . . .

With Shirley Povich

SEEIN' as how this is the open season on polls, with the best minds selecting the greatest this and the outstanding that of the year, never let it be said that this department is ducking the issue. Herewith, without further ado, I am setting down for posterity the Greatest Blunders of 1934 in sports.

1—Bill Brown's famous pronouncement at Asbury Park, N. J., where he was inspecting Max Baer's training camp a few days before the Baer-Carnera fight last June. Mr. Brown it was, who, as boxing commissioner in New York, summed up the situation with the never-to-be forgotten words: "Baer is in no shape to be put in the same ring with Carnera. I should not want to be held responsible for what happens to Baer." For out-and-out free-style blundering, I nominate Mr. Brown, a man who——

2—Frankie Frisch's managerial strategy in the fifth game of the world series at St. Louis. On this occasion, the eminent manager of the Cardinals sent Dizzy Dean onto the diamond as a pinch runner the one man whose good health was the greatest guarantee that the Cards would win the series. That Dean was not killed when struck in the head by a ball thrown by Bill Rogell as he barged into second base, attests to the thickness of the Dean skull. That Dean was on the bases in the first place, attests to the thickness of the skull of Mr. Frisch.

6—The decision rendered by the gentlemen who judged the second Ross-McLarnin fight. For plain and fancy astigmatism, they set a new record. All that Ross did during the 15 rounds was to close both of McLarnin's eyes, give him an overcoat of punches, all but knock him into retirement. Imagine the embarrassment of the boys who had dictated the round-by-round description when the announcement came from the referee and judges that McLarnin had won the fight.

7—Tom Sopwith's protest of foul against Harold S. Vanderbilt and the Rainbow in the final race for the America's Cup. After the late Thomas K. Lipton's perennial displays of sportsmanship in the same races, the Sopwith protest struck a sour note. In defeat, the British challenger could have been as great a hero as in victory—in graceful defeat.

3—Bill Terry's ill-conceived and ill-timed jibe at the Dodgers. It was before the 1934 season began that Mr. Terry, who speaks for publication with little or no provocation, decided to poke a bit of fun at the Dodgers. When asked concerning his opinion of the Brooklyn club's chances in the 1934 pennant race, Mr. Terry sniffed disdainfully, and spake: "The Dodgers, you say? Are they still in the league?" It was the Dodgers who answered Mr. Terry's question for him with those three straight defeats of the Giants in the last three games of the season. The Dodgers, it was revealed, were still in the league, and the Giants were out one pennant they thought had been safely won.

4—Mickey Cochrane's managerial strategy in the world series, with Schoolboy Rowe, the league's best pitcher, at his command, Cochrane withholds him from the first game of the series against the Cardinals, thereby stripping from the Tigers the confidence that had helped them to the American League pennant. Five errors by the Detroit infield in the first four innings were the direct effect. The team that had been afraid of no foe during the regular American League season began to doubt itself after Cochrane refused to open up on the pitching mound with the pitcher who had won 16 straight games.

5—Chubby Parcells' weird tackle in the Georgetown-Maryland game. Mr. Parcells was awaiting developments near midfield after throwing a pass that fell into the hands of Sothoron of Maryland in the first quarter. Sothoron was under way on his 73-yard run when he encountered Parcells, who for some unexplainable reason attempted to spill the runner instead of tackling him. Parcells succeeded only in spilling himself and Sothoron raced on to the 2-yard line. Maryland won the game and Parcells won himself a pair of goat's horns that sprouted with the passing minutes as Georgetown failed to score.

Repeal Hailed as Aid To Sports, Poll Shows

NEW YORK, Dec. 21 (U.P.).—In the year that followed the repeal of prohibition, approximately 1,648,200,000 gallons of spirits, beer and wine gurgled down the throats of American consumers at a cost of approximately $2,530,000,000.

What effect, if any, did this drinking and this huge expenditure have upon sports.

A small plurality of the Nation's sports editors claimed today in a Nation-wide United Press poll that the stimulation resulting from drinking and the increased flow of cash resulting from liquor expenditures was beneficial to sports in 1934.

But a robust minority claimed that the aftermath of repeal had no effect upon sports. Of the 302 editors who voted on the question, 129 said the aftermath of repeal was beneficial; 116 said it had no effect, 22 said it was detrimental, and 35 answered in such manner that their votes could not be counted either way.

Of these editors, men in a competent position to observe accurately, 228 said increased drinking had been noticed in connection with spectators at sporting events, and 16 said there was less.

G. L. Parsons, of the Denver Post; Wilbur Wood, of the New York Sun; Frank Lewis, of the Cleveland Press; Charles Johnson, of the Minneapolis Star, and the others who voted the aftermath of repeal beneficial to sports pointed out that it resulted as follows:

(1) The elbow benders in legal taverns, clubs, bars, etc., met and talked sports over their glasses, stimulating interest.

(2) Increased prosperity resulting from repeal gave the sports-wise persons connected with the liquor industry, in all its ramifications, more money with which to attend sports events.

(3) Increased betting on sports events nearly ten fold.

(4) Made sports events more of social functions. Persons attending big events like football games in neutral territories, prize fights, baseball games and horse races, staged parties while traveling to them, at the events, and afterward.

(5) Drinking added to the enthusiasm of the crowds and made converts of newcomers.

Dry Era Drinking Cited.

Those editors who said they saw no effect resulting from repeal, as far as sports were concerned—like George Daley of the New York Herald-Tribune, and Edwin J. Pollock of the Philadelphia Evening Public Ledger—emphasized that there had been plenty of drinking during prohibition, that some of the banner years in sports had occurred during certain prohibition years of the "golden decade" and that if any attendance increases had been noticed in any line of sports since December 6, 1933, there was no good reason for attributing them to liquor.

The few who claimed to have noted detrimental effects pointed out more rowdyism at sports events, tending to turn away women fans; increased beer drinking among baseball players, making them loggy and less efficient; endangered sports officials, newspapermen and spectators who may be the victims of thrown bottles and other misles.

What Prohibition?

Some of those who evaded the question, gave such replies on the effect of repeal as "staggering" "what prohibition?" "clearer heads for Sunday morning quarter backs due to better bug juice" etc.

A. M. Goul of the Daily Sun, Goose Creek, Tex., said, "About the only effect noticeable is that the empty bottles picked up after football and baseball games bear labels instead of being bare-backed."

Mann Quits As Aid to Turner

Successor to Have Full Charge of Ring Cards, Says Promoter.

By Bill McCormick.

JOE TURNER, local boxing promoter, and Frankie Mann, his matchmaker, came to the long-expected parting of the ways yesterday just as difficulty in obtaining financial backing for remodeling necessary to comply with fire regulations threatened to close permanently the Riding and Hunt Club—Turner's only competition.

An agreement now being negotiated with C. E. (Fats) Cornell, who formerly promoted at the Twin City Arena near Laurel, virtually would mark the withdrawal of Turner from the promotion of boxing. Under the terms of the agreement, which has not yet been signed, Cornell would assume complete control of all boxing at the Auditorium, which is leased for the purpose by Turner, would provide his own financial backing and turn over a certain percentage of his receipts to Turner for the use of his facilities.

Ahearn Denies Reports.

Goldie Ahearn, matchmaker at the Riding and Hunt Club, which District officials have ordered closed until certain fire regulations are complied with, last night flatly denied reports he had "thrown up the sponge" in the matter of making the necessary repairs.

"Those operating the Riding and Hunt Club have declined to make the necessary changes," Ahearn stated. "I understand the deed for the property has been turned back to the William Phelps Eno estate. I am opening negotiations with the estate to see if they wish to put out the money for the remodeling. If they do not, I will get estimates and if the cost of necessary repairs is not prohibitive, I'll pay for them."

The Turner-Mann severance officially took on the form of a resignation from the matchmaker. Turner stated that Mann had tendered his resignation some months ago, but he refused to accept it, suggesting that they continue together until the New Year. Following the Phil Furr-ay McCadon bout at the Auditorium Thursday night, which was an artistic success but a financial flop, Mann suggested that Turner retire from the boxing game, the promoter said.

"I thanked him for having stuck by me so long without having made any money," oe stated, "And told him I would accept his resignation this time as I did not feel I should stand in his way if he could make money matchmaking in some other spot."

May Promote Bouts.

In announcing his resignation, Mann said he still was interested in the boxing business and was contemplating promoting at one of two spots. He said he had the financial backing for operating at either of the sities.

Under a temporary agreement, Cornell will stage one show at the Auditorium on December 28, even if the permanent agreement is not signed. His card for the date has not yet been definitely decided.

Mann and Turner teamed up when boxing first was legalized here last April, first at Griffith Stadium and more lately at the Auditorium. During that time they failed to realize a profit.

Morrison Sought By Northwestern

Dallas, Tex., Dec. 21 (AP).—Ray Morrison, head coach of Southern Methodist University, was in Chicago tonight to confer with Northwestern University officials concerning the possibility of replacing Dick Hanley as head coach of the Big Ten school.

Morrison, who also has an offer from Vanderbilt University but has declined to give an answer, left here yesterday after Northwestern officials had requested him to consider the vacancy.

Dr. Charles C. Selecman, president of Southern Methodist University, confirmed that Morrison had gone to Chicago to confer with Northwestern officials.

Huey Long Quiets 3d Street Coaches

Baton Rouge, La., Dec. 21 (AP).—Senator Huey P. Long said today he had moved the "coaching" of Louisiana State University football "from Third street to the State capitol."

He added that while he still had nothing to say about picking a successor to Capt. Lawrence "Biff" Jones as the university's coach he might if Jones "keep talking."

Discussion of L. S. U. football by alumni and supporters along Third street, Baton Rouge's "Main street," has been an institution as far back as anyone can recall.

"I have fired the Third street coaches and transferred the coaching to the State capitol," Long asserted.

"There was a bunch of 'em in here a little while ago trying to tell me about a new coach. I wouldn't let 'em tell me!"

Pennant Seen For Tribe by Johnson

Ranks Own Team and Tigers as Outstanding 1935 Contenders.

WALTER JOHNSON, Cleveland Associated Press he bemanager, yesterday told the lieved his Indians and the Detroit Tigers were the outstanding contenders for the 1935 American League baseball pennant.

He said he believed Cleveland has as good a chance to win the flag as any other team.

"Detroit will be strong, but perhaps not so successful as last year," the one-time "Big Train" said. "The Tigers were a good ball club and deserved the pennant last season but they were extremely fortunate in that they got through the year without injuries."

Ranks Contenders.

It's almost like taking a shot in the dark, he said, but the way things stack up now, Johnson believes the teams are to finish in this order:

1. Cleveland.
2. Detroit.
3. New York.
4. Boston.
5. Washington or Philadelphia.
7. St. Louis.
8. Chicago.

"The Yankees will be strong again and may offer some trouble for the rest of us," he said. "Boston also will have a better team, and it later may be strengthened enough to be a real threat. Cronin will add much to the team, but the Red Sox must patch a couple of gaps before they will be dangerous.

In Second Division.

"I should say Washington and Philadelphia will fight it out for the top of the second division, while St. Louis and Chicago will be the tail-enders," he said.

All-Eastern Stars Practice in Utah

Will Reach San Francisco Today for Jan. 1 Tilt.

Ogden, Utah, Dec. 21 (AP).—The All-Eastern football team, under the direction of Coaches Dick Hanley and Andy Kerr, engaged in a two-hour drill here today, en route to San Francisco, where it meets the Western team in the Shrine game on New Year's Day.

The 1934 Eastern squad is lighter than teams of the past, but Coach Hanley said it is the best to represent the East since the games were inaugurated eight years ago.

San Francisco, Dec. 21 (AP).—Eastern and Western football stars who will engage in a charity game here on New Year's Day will be welcomed tomorrow.

The East squad will go directly from their train to a luncheon given by Big Ten alumni. Mayor Angelo Rossi will welcome them before a workout. Five members of the Western aggregation checked in today with Coaches Orin Hollingbery and Percy Locey. They were Clyde Carter, Woody Ullin, Charles Mucha and Paul Sulkosky.

Tulane in Brisk Drill; Temple Arrives Today

New Orleans, Dec. 21 (AP).—As if spurred to more spirited action by the mere knowledge that the Temple Owls are hourly drawing nearer New Orleans, Tulane's Green Wave went through a brisk workout this afternoon, Coach Ted Cox served notice that it was only a forerunner of the heavy work scheduled for the next week.

The Greenies' opponents in the Sugar Bowl classic of New Year's Day are scheduled to arrive in New Orleans at 7:30 a. m. tomorrow and will stop over for about two hours before continuing on to Baton Rouge, where "Pop" Warner will pitch camp for final workouts.

Jack Dempsey to Sell His California Hotel

Joe Dempsey, brother, said yesterday the former heavyweight champion had telegraphed him to sell his hotel here, the Barbara, and "come East to take charge here." Jack Dempsey has recently opened a restaurant in New York.

Baer Is Serious As Levinsky Bout Nears

BOSTON, Dec. 21 (AP).—Max Baer, the breezy heavyweight champion, is going back to work next week. He came here today to officiate at the Boston Garden's Christmas charity boxing show, along with two former titlists, Jack Dempsey and Jack Sharkey.

"I'm heading for Chicago early tomorrow," Baer said. "You know I have to fight King Levinsky there next Friday night, and I'm going to get in shape for him.

"All you need is to be out of condition to have a clown like Levinsky tap you on your ribs and, champion or no champion, you're going down. What a chump I'd look like on the floor in a ring with Levinsky!"

Plans Campbell Benefit.

After his exhibition with Levinsky, Baer will give a similar performance in Detroit on January 4. Then he will go to California to take part in a benefit for Mrs. Frank Campbell, widow of the boxer who died the day after their bout, before resuming his movie career.

"Who is there for me to fight? Who could I get into the ring with and draw a big gate? Nobody. The only man in the world today who could draw a crowd is Primo Carnera. Just let the big fellow lick somebody, make a great comeback and he and I will fill the biggest boxing arena in the country."

Travels With Brother.

Baer was accompaned by his gigantic 19-year-old brother, "Buddy," who was also on the Boston Garden program. The champion has great hopes for the 237-pound youngster's future.

"When Buddy is ready to be champion, in about two years, I am going to retire from the ring and let him battle the field in a tournament for my title."

Pin Congress Tourney Entries Surpass 1,329

Milwaukee, Dec. 21 (AP).—Elmer Baumgarten, secretary of the American Bowling Congress, announced today that entries for the thirty-fifth annual A. B. C. tournament, starting March 1 at Syracuse, N. Y., have already exceeded the 1,329 total team enrollment last year at Peoria, Ill., and that, with entries closing February 1, the 1935 meet is likely to attract well over 2,000 clubs.

With the registration surpassing the expected 1,500 figures, it is probable, Baumgarten said, that an extension of a week or more to the March 1 original closing date will be necessary.

Gelbert to Seek His Old Job; Skin Grafted on Heel

"I'm going up to my home in Chambersburg tomorrow," Gelbert said, "and will return here next week, when we will definitely know whether the operation was a complete success.

"If everything turns out okay—and I think it will—I'll go South during the last week in February to join the Cards and try to win back my position with the club."

O'Mahoney Future Great—Dempsey

Jack Would Buy Contract of Irish Wrestler.

Boston, Dec. 21 (U.P.).—Jack Dempsey thinks that Dan O'Mahoney, Irish wrestler, has the makings of a great heavyweight boxer, and the former champion began trying to sign O'Mahoney to a contract today.

Dempsey, here for a charity boxing show, offered O'Mahoney $50,000 for his exclusive services, but no deal was made immediately. "He is the only heavyweight in sight who can be built up as an opponent for Max Baer," Dempsey said.

Marathon Runner Honored in Canada

Webster Named Nation's Outstanding Athlete.

Toronto, Dec. 21 (AP).—Harold Webster, 40-year-old Hamilton, Ontario, marathon runner, today was selected as Canada's outstanding athlete in 1934, on the basis of a nation-wide poll of sports writers by the Canadian press.

Out of a probable 39 votes, Webster, who won the marathon at the British Empire games, received 14, against 12 for Dave Komonen, of Sudbury, another marathon ace who won the honor last year. Komonen retained both his American and Canadian marathon titles during the year and captured the Boston marathan as well, but was defeated in the Empire trials by Webster.

Webster already has received the Norton H. Crow Memorial Award, given annually by the Canadian Amateur Athletic Union to the athlete it regards as greatest during the year.

Young Golfers Pace Coast Tourney

Four Tie at 69 for Lead; Screen and Tennis Notables Play.

PASADENA, Calif., Dec. 21 (AP). Youth again showed the way to the veterans in the Pasadena $4,000 Open Golf Tournament today as three players in their early 20's stepped out with par-plundering scores of 69 in the second qualifying division.

Joining Emory Zimmerman, the young Portland (Oreg.) pro who took the lead yesterday with a 69, were John Revolta, of Milwaukee, and Dave Martin and Ralph Guldahl, of Los Angeles. Today's field found the course more to its liking than that of yesterday, with cards of 78 necessary to qualify for tomorrow's second round, as compared with 79's of the opening day.

Trailing the three young musketeers of the fairways in fourth place was Victor Khezzi, Deal, N. J., with 70. A four-way tie resulted for fifth position among Jimmy Hines, Long Island; Charles Guest and Neil White, Los Angeles, and Henry Balista, Altadena (Calif.) amateur, with 71's to equal par.

Von Elm Cards 72.

Lead of 20-17 Is Futile to Colonials

G. W. Handicapped by Illness of 2 Players; Howell in Form.

By Lewis F. Atchison.

WITH another exhibition of the same frigid, deliberate style of play that sent Maryland tumbling into defeat the previous night, Indiana last night came from behind to win a thrilling 45-41 victory over George Washington's hitherto undefeated quintet.

A throng of 2,000 fans that literally hung from the rafters of the Roosevelt High School gym saw the Colonials assume a 20-17 lead in the first half, only to falter and lag behind as the Hoosiers came thundering down the home stretch to victory.

Until midway in the final period, when Indiana found itself, it appeared that the downtown school would protect its slim margin and emerge the winner. But the Hoosiers' deadly aim and well-directed passes broke down G. W.'s defense and they battled through to win.

Slippery Floor Handicap.

Both teams were handicapped by the slippery floor that rendered footing treacherous and prohibited sharp-cutting at the risk of injury. Both teams played recklessly, sliding full-length down the floor and nose-diving into the crowd that nearly overflowed onto the court.

G. W. was doubly handicapped by the illness of Walter Bakum, guard, and Hal Kiesel, center, both of whom had slight touches of flu. Bakum got up out of a sick bed to play, but was used sparingly. Kiesel played the best part of the 40 minutes, but was visibly off form.

The teams resorted to close guarding and cautious tactics in the early minutes of play, but, as they warmed to the task at hand, pot shots rattled off the backboard like buckshot. Goldfadden's successful foul shot broke the ice, but Gunning presented Indiana with a 2-1 lead, sinking a neat basket from the corner.

G. W. Takes Lead.

The Hoosiers, with Kehrt and Stout bearing the brunt of the attack, kept out in front until Schonfeld's snowbird sent the Colonials ahead, 14-13. Jim Howell and Tuffy Leemans, scoring three times each, led the counter-attack. Leemans looked surprisingly good.

Kehrt's pot shot put Indiana out in front again, 15-13, but fouls converted by Kiesel and Howell sent G. W. to the fore, 16-15, and the Colonials went on to lead by a 20-17 count at the half-way mark.

A brace of field goals by Will Kehrt and another by Fred Fechtman, the visitors' 6-foot 9-inch center, brought Indiana within a point of G. W., which led, 22-21, early in the final stanza. But Schoenfeld, a slippery, clever little guard, and Howell prodded G. W.'s total to 26, and this advantage was maintained until the count stood 34-29.

Whittles Down Lead.

Then Indiana started whittling on that lead and two field goals by Porter, another by Gunning and still another by Fechtman set the Midwesterners out in front, 37-34. Fechtman converted a brace of

Legislators Rap Tennessee's Refusal of Stadium to Bears

KNOXVILLE, Tenn., Dec. 21 (AP). Two local members of the Tennessee Legislature today protested the University of Tennessee's refusal to permit the Chicago Bears and the Brooklyn Dodgers, professional football teams, to use the institution's field for a charity game Saturday.

State Senator Arthur Atchley said he called Gov. Hill McAlister asking him to use his influence to reverse the decision of the university and obtain the field for the game.

"The Governor said he would do what he could about it," Atchley reported.

The university's athletic council turned down a request for use of the gridiron with the explanation that "members of the Southeastern Conference believed professional football in the South will injure the present intercollegiate program."

The council also said the stadium and field was "dedicated to the use of amateur sports."

"Unless the university rescinds its decision as to the use of the field, I'm going to fight every appropriation for the university that comes up in the next Legislature, said Representative Ernest Briton Cross.

Beattie Feathers and Heman Hickman, former football stars at the University of Tennessee, are members of the professional teams which will play. Feathers is a half back with the Bears and Hickman plays with the Dodgers.

Conventional Is Tiring 2d In Race

Fowler's Ride Is Factor; McDonald H., Red Riot Surprise Winners.

By Walter Haight
(Post Staff Writer).

CHARLES TOWN RACE TRACK, Dec. 21.—Simple Singer, a 5-year-old gelding which eats the oats of H. R. Smith and in return wins horse races, used the simple method of showing more speed than four rivals to take the Shenandoah Purse, the day's feature event here in the mountains. Capably ridden by Tommy Fowler, the son of Peter Quince galloped to the finish line three lengths in advance of Conventional, which, in turn, held a four-length lead over Granite Prince. Three Grand and Once completed the field. Easter Herald and Gloritone were late scratches and their absence took much zest from the race.

There was some talk of a "build-up" on the mutuel as Simple Singer paid $7 after being quoted on the odds board at 7 to 5 at one stage of the betting. However, there was a steady flow of play for Conventional, which finally brought this one down to slightly above even money. Simple Singer was flashed at 5 to 1, but paid only 5 to 2.

Favorite Takes Lead.

Conventional, breaking from the outside of the field, was first to show in front as the seven-furlong contest began. Granite Prince, with Sammy Palumbo up, was close to the pace with Simple Singer third. On the trip up the backstretch, Conventional opened a long lead and it appeared that the sudden favorite would lead to the wire. However, on the far turn, Fowler began his move on Simple Singer. He passed Granite Prince and went on to battle it out with the now-tiring Conventional.

In the stretch drive, Simple Singer shook off the favorite and coasted over the line the winner by some three lengths. Quattlebaum eased up on Conventional but still had plenty of daylight to take the place from Granite Prince.

Two Long Shots Score.

The daily wake-ups materialized in the third and sixth races when Red Riot, $29.80, and McDonald H., $43.80, romped to victories with most of the customers staring in amazement.

The day's betting totaled only $26,404, the lowest figure of the meeting, and one that did not smack of "build-up" money, Jockeys Fowler and Holland divided the riding honors with two winners each.

Bill Tilden, Outlawed by Group He Formed, to Play Here Despite Opposition

Ban on Star Is Move of 2 Groups

Forced to Shift From Tech to C. U. Gym for Exhibition.

By John R. Vosberg.

WHEN William T. Tilden struts out on the floor of the Catholic University gymnasium on the night of January 11 for his match with George Lott, Washington will be afforded a close-up view of Public Enemy No. 1, so far as the United States Professional and United States Lawn Tennis Associations are concerned.

To those august bodies, Mr. Tilden is an outlaw. Not that being outlawed is especially a new experience for Mr. Tilden. Outside of the Chicago Black Sox, he has been probably the most outlawed individual in sports. But in the past only one organization has done the outlawing. Now it is two. Tilden has raised the art of being outlawed almost as much as he has the art of tennis.

Thou Must Not Sponsor.

Received during the past two or three weeks by Tom Mangan, president of the Middle Atlantic Lawn Tennis Association, is a form letter from Eugene Moss, executive secretary of the U. S. L. T. A., explaining in much detail that that organization forbids any of its member clubs to sponsor an exhibition in which Tilden appears.

The U. S. L. T. A. is working in conjunction with the Professional Tennis Association in what is termed a "gentleman's agrement," Between the two of them, Tilden has been definitely blacklisted.

The reason? Tilden refused to reveal his year's earnings in professional tennis to the professional association. The U. S. L. T. A., never particularly close to Tilden, readily entered the "gentleman's agreement" with the peeved professional body. Hence, the Public Parks Association of Washington could not sponsor the Tilden exhibitions at Tech High this year, as it did last winter, for the Public Parks body is an affiliate of the U. S. L. T. A.

C. U. Gym Available.

If Catholic University were still a member of the National Intercollegiate Tennis Association, as it was a year ago, Tilden would not be playing at the C. U. gym January 11. But C. U. dropped out of the intercollegiate body and the U. S. L. T. A. has nothing to say about his playing on the Cardinal floor.

But let him try to stage and exhibition in the spring at Chevy Chase or Columbia Country Club. Tilden has the laugh on both associations, though, for there are plenty of courts in every city, indoor and outdoor, unaffiliated with either association.

Consequently, all the accusations of the two organizations are falling off Tilden like water off a duck's back. He was a highly important bread winner for the U. S. L. T. A., and founded the professional association, but neither is exactly proving to be a Frankenstein to Tilden. Anyway, he's still an outlaw.

Celtics to Oppose Olmsteds Tonight

Two Preliminaries Booked in Alexandria.

Alexandria, Va., Dec. 21 (Spl.).—The St. Mary's Celtics will open their home season tomorrow night opposing the Olmsted Grill five, of Washington.

Two preliminaries have been scheduled—the Boy Scouts Troop, No. 134, will meet the Colonial Midgets, of Washington, at 7 p. m., and at 8 p. m. The Washington Post Seniors, local branch, will clash with the De Molay Seniors.

Manager Billy Padgett, of the Columbia Fire Department, has booked the Davis-Elkins College to perform here Friday, December 28. Coach McMenniman and Padgett have been angling with the West Virginia institution for the past week and landed the contract early today.

Western High Natators To Meet Friends School

Western High School's swimming team faces another strong opponent this afternoon when it matches strokes with the Friends School natators, of Baltimore, in the latter city. The meet will start at 3:30 p. m.

Coach Dallas Shirley's boys are not particularly perturbed by their defeat by the Central Y. M. C. A. in their initial meet, in view of the victories twice scored over George Washington University by the Y. The following boys will make the trip: Capt. Jack Rait, Dorman, G. and H. Reinburg, Sjerline, Clay, Bonham, Harding, Carney, R. and J. Brown, Russell, Nagle, Moynelo, Dorsey and Manager Bob Spiller.

Glass Company Chief Reports Better Business

New York, Dec. 21 (AP).—H. S. Wherrett, president of the Pittsburgh Plate Glass Co., told the company's regional managers at a conference that business this year was 10 per cent better than in 1933 and prospects for 1935 were bright.

The improved outlook for the automobile industry, one of the largest users of the company's products, has accounted for much of the expansion, he said.

Seek Court Games.

The McLean A. C. wants games for next week with teams having gyms. Call Manager Clarke at Falls Church. 828-F-31, between 5:30 and 6:30 p. m.

Tilden Offers A Davis Cup Set-up

Suggests Wood, Parker, Mako, Budge; Urges Young Players.

NEW YORK, Dec. 21 (AP).—Big Bill Tilden did a little kibitzing today on the Davis Cup committee of the United States Lawn Tennis Association and offered his suggestions for the make-up of the 1935 United States cup team.

They are: Sidney B. Wood, jr., Frankie Parker, Gene Mako and Don Budge. He would have Richard Norris Williams or Wilmer Allison as nonplaying captain.

"They (the cup committee)," said Tilden in explanation of his selections, "have got to scrap the so-called stars and rebuild with youngsters. They've got to be willing to take a licking for three or four years more and still stick to one line-up. They've got to build from the ground up. That's what the French did. They decided on Rene Lacoste, Henri Cochet, Jean Borotra and Jacques Brugnon as their best combination and kept it intact until they won the cup, even though six years were required to do it.

"Wood is the greatest amateur we have, despite his inconsistency. Parker undoubtedly is the best of the younger singles players and should be Wood's running mate. Mako and Budge, the Coast youngsters, are the coming doubles champion of the country."

Giants Win Five All-Star Pro Places

NEW YORK, Dec. 21 (AP).—Of the former all-America talent playing for pay under the banner of organized professional football, five erstwhile college gridiron heroes were awarded places on the first two all-National League elevens selected today by the coaches of the nine league teams.

Three-fifths of that number—Bronco Negurski of Minnesota and the Chicago Bears; Ken Strong of New York University and the New York Giants and Earl (Dutch) Clark of Colorado College and the Detroit Lions—were placed in the backfield of the first team, which was dominated by a quintet of players on the league champion New York Giants team, four Bears and two Lions.

The other two former all-Americans, Quarterback Harry Newman of Michigan and the Giants and 275-pound Glenn (Turk) Edwards of Washington State and the Boston Red Skins, won places on the second team.

Five Men Repeat.

The first team includes five repeaters from last year's all-league eleven. The ends, Bill Hewitt of the Bears and Red Badgro of the Giants, won their places again as did Mel Hein, Giants' center, Dr. Joe Kopcha, Bears' guard, and Nagurski.

Beattie Feathers, who was a backfield sensation at Tennessee last year, gained the distinction of being the first recruit to win a position on the first eleven. He led the league in ground gaining.

On the Sidelines . . .

By Edward J. Neil.
(Associated Press Writer).

THE cycle of bad prize fights—wearisome, unimportant prize fights—that has gripped the East and particularly Madison Square Garden lately seems to have developed an international complexion.

Some of the comment from South America on Primo Carnera's 12-round fiasco with Victorio Campolo in Buenos Aires a couple of weeks ago outranks anything written on such classical cheese cakes as Maxey Rosenbloom's loss of his light heavyweight title to Bob Olin, and others at the Garden, too horrible to mention.

Carnera, a hero still down there despite the plastering Max Baer gave him, flew into Buenos Aires in triumph. Italian girls spread a fragile, scented path of flowers for his gigantic feet. He was feted, wined, dined. He was the great Carnera!

Campolo was to blame, there being only 30,000 people at the arena—and how any American fight promoter would revel in a crowd that size—instead of the expected 70,000. Victorio had eaten himself into a condition where he weighed 259 pounds, only 7 less than Carnera, instead of his normal 220. Even that 259 was by official announcement alone. They weighed in secret. And the probability is that Campolo went closer to 270, for he looked around the middle like the pictures you see in the papers of those fellows who are always breaking records by knocking off six dozen eggs, a few chickens, 20 pounds of sausage and a few loaves of bread at one sitting.

Can't Fool All the People.

It was a bad fight, slow, awkward. Campolo apparently was in there to evade the thing that he got in New York in 1931, a two-round knockout.

So the Buenos Aires press started swinging.

Said La Nacion, the New York Times of South America: "Carnera does not possess true aggressiveness, nor is his pugilistic personality anything like that—before Sharkey signalized a cycle of mediocrity—of those who preceded him in possession of the major title."

The paper's fight expert, tossing his punches in even loftier style, said of Carnera: "He evidenced the possession of a discreet technique and a certain amount of combatative intelligence."

He thought even less of Campolo, the native son.

"His efforts," said the expert, "did not tend, at any time, toward victory, and even when one could think that his plan was to obtain a triumph on points, it soon was easy to advert that with such meager combative equipment his true object was to finish the match on his feet."

Everything Was Poor.

But when they put a fight on the pan down there, they toss everybody connected with it, in the ring or out, into the grease for a similar browning. The Argentine Boxing Federation, the promoters, the matchmakers and the preliminary fighters all took a hiding in the public prints.

"The Argentine Federation proceeded in lamentable fashion," said Critica's critic. They had juggled the boys around with a secret weighing in. The promoters were cirticized for getting the card started an hour late, forcing the crowd to leave the stadium in the dark with no lights.

"The preliminaries," said La Prensa, "emphasized the scant notion which certain organizers of combats have with respect to the show with which they should treat the fans who pay an elevated price to see it. We desire to refer to the qualities of the boxers who intervened in the preliminary matches, who, more than professional boxers, seemed to be simple novices, being constantly subjected to the jibes of those near the ringside, who could appreciate with great exactitude the complete lack of knowledge of the participants."

Alabama Given Big Send-Off By 2,000

Coach Thomas Feels Tide Will Win if It Is in Its Best Form.

UNIVERSITY, Ala., Dec. 21 (AP).—Shouting their confidence of victory, 2,000 townspeople and students gave Alabama's Red Regiment a rousing send-off today as Coach Frank Thomas and his 35 players entrained for Pasadena for their Rose Bowl encounter with Stanford.

The throng was thinned by the fact that the university had suspended classes for the holidays and most of the school's 4,000 students were at home.

"I think the boys will win if they are at their best. If they are not, I don't know."

Nine Victories in Row.

Their "best" this season has brought them nine consecutive victories, and 287 points to 32 for their opponents.

Hardened by two weeks of practice since training was resumed, the Alabama squad is in excellent condition, with the single exception of Bob Ed Morrow, regular guard, whose nose was broken in practice last week. He is expected to be ready for Stanford, however.

Millard Howell, ace back, who was bothered by injuries earlier, has been pronounced in the best condition of the year. He has not scrimmaged since September, but has done plenty of running in the big games, and played the entire 60 minutes against Tennessee, the Tide's toughest foe in the regular season.

Duquesne Is Scheduled.

Bloomington, Ill., Dec. 21 (AP).—Illinois Wesleyan University will open its 1935 football season against Duquesne University at Pittsburgh, September 30, Coach J. Norman Elliott announced today.

West Virginia Boasts Fast Quintet

Experienced Team Enters Year With 'Beat Pitt' as Its Slogan.

MORGANTOWN, W. Va., Dec. 21 (AP).—A fast and experienced quintet carries the Gold and Blue of West Virginia University into the Eastern Intercollegiate Basket Ball Conference wars this winter with "Beat Pitt" as the slogan.

The 1934-35 season may give "Big Joe" Stydahar, giant tackle of the Mountaineers' football squad, a chance to get even with the Panthers, who regularly down the West Virginians on the gridiron.

Stydahar, center and leading scorer of the basket ball conference a year ago, tops the list of regulars back for another season with only one of last year's letter wearers missing.

Stydahar at Center.

Coach Marshall (Little Sleepy) Glenn hasn't definitely decided on the firststring line-up, but indications now are that veterans will man at least four postiions. Stydahar will be at center, of course, and Albert Colebank, regular forward a year ago, is back again. So, too, are a pair of first-rate guarls, Andy Mestrovic and Lou Fidler. The other forward post may go to Bill Simpson, a junior, who saw considerable service last year.

The reserves include Tod Goodwin, Fred Wilson and Patsy Slats, all used frequently in the last campaign, and Eugene Hester, who was Stydahar's understudy at center.

Hunt Heads Junior Net Seeding

NEW YORK, Dec. 21 (Spl.).—A top-flight seeded list headed by Gilbert Hunt, of Washington, D. C., former M. I. T. student, was announced today for the 20th annual National Junior indoor tennis championships opening here next Tuesday.

Hunt was runner-up to Frankie Parker of Milwaukee last year. Parker will not defend his title. Jack Behr of New York was seeded No. 2. The list of entries includes representatives of 14 colleges, among whom are Russell Ball, Northwestern; seeded No. 2; Robert T. Madden, Pittsburgh, No. 3, and Carl G. Nesbitt, jr., Brown, No. 4.

The ranking committee had little difficulty in selecting Hunt for the top-seeded position. The Washington youngster is No. 2 intercollegiate ranking player in the country and is ranked No. 3 in the outdoor junior lists.

In the boys' tournament, Robert A. Low of Choate School was seeded No. 1. Boys under 15 years of age compete in this division.

Alexandria High Wins Third Game

Mt. St. Joseph's Bows to Twins, 35-20.

Alexandria, Dec. 21 (Spl.).—Alexandria High School rang up its third victory in four starts at Armory Hall here tonight by trouncing Mount St. Joseph's of Baltimore, 35 to 20. The Twins closed fast in the last three quarters to draw away from the visitors after leading only 14 to 12 at the end of the first period.

With Bennie Burrell and Nappy Nugent hitting the scoring column regularly, the former scoring 11 and the latter 9 points, Alexandria was never in danger after the initial quarter. The score at the half was 18 to 13, and at the end of the third quarter, 25 to 16. In a preliminary the Alexandria girls' team drubbed an Alumni team known as the Buddies, 33 to 9, with the Misses R. Shapiro and M. Shu doing the bulk of the scoring.

Britishers' Bad-Sports Charge Arouses Doubts About Selves

By Jimmy Powers.
(Pinch Hitting for Paul Gallico.)

NEW YORK, Dec. 21 (Spl.).—Americans again are accused of being bad sports. A scathing denunciation of our soccer players, runners, hurdlers, jumpers and golfers was printed in the London Dispatch this week and released on the same day that the New York Yacht Club held its annual meeting here.

The club, incidentally, made public for the first time its race committee's report on the protests of Tom Sopwith. Last September off Newport, if you recall, Sopwith was badly beaten in the America Cup match. Sopwith went home and, according to the Dispatch, "Tom was robbed of victory by men whose ideas of sportsmanship are different from ours. What to us is bad, to them is perfectly fair and right. The difference between us is fundamental; our tendency is not only to keep the rules but to err on the right side of them."

List of Complaints.

The Dispatch then enumerated a long list of alleged complaints of ill-treatment Britishers had been subjected to by Americans in recent years. Some of the complaints were utterly fantastic—such as the charge that Segrave, the auto racer, had his tires cut in Florida—while others had foundation in fact. One pointed out, and quite truthfully, too, that Gar Wood used his brother as a decoy to lure Kaye Don across the starting line ahead of the gun at Detroit during the motorboat races.

Now, we do not claim that all Americans are good sports; there are some of our "professional" sportsmen, especially among the boxers, who have resorted to shady practices. But we do claim that, all things being equal and all men human, we are as good and as fair as the British. We have this added fact in our favor—we do not brag about a special, an ultra, type of "sportsmanship" as the British do.

Stress Personal Virtue.

We have always thought the term "British sportsmanship" a form of affection. To harp on a quality constantly and to plume yourself on it is just to confess that you have not got it. You see, this in the case of men who boast of their success with women, their bravery, their learning or their money. You may conclude that when a man begins to stress unnecessarily a personal virtue, it is in exactly that direction that he is weakest. If a man is popular, or rich, or intelligent, it will not occur to him to make a great show of affecting it; he is content to know it.

Few of us understand the technicalities of yacht racing, yet the report of the New York Yacht Club race committee clearly lists four instances and appends four photographs in substantiation of rule violations by the British ship. At the start of the first race the clumsily sailed Endevor "had difficulty in setting her mainsail and it was apparent that if the start were not postponed the Rainbow would have had a sail over." This part of the report means that the Rainbow could have won the first race hands down. As it was, the committee broke all rules and gave the British ship a chance to get straightened out. The British ship then won this particular race.

Entitled to Victory.

The committee report states that it had no right to change the rules, that the Rainbow was entitled to the victory because the race was to decide not only the better ship, but the better skipper and crew and that it had leaned over backward to give the Britisher a fair show.

The report further stated that it allowed the Britisher to strip herself of 1,000 pounds and that the Rainbow was not an "overtaking" yacht and hence did not have to answer a luff. All in all, the report simmered down to this fact—Harold Vanderbilt proved himself to be a smarter seaman than Sopwith. Furthermore, the British boat had exceptionally fair treatment on four occasions and the only rules broken were those exceptions made in the visitor's favor.

Vanderbilt, the American skipper, is not personally popular; first, because he is tremendously wealthy, and, second, because he lacks the surface heartiness, the bluff "come-have-a-drink-of-Scotch-with-me" air of Sopwith which so entranced American sports writers at the time. Now we learn that Vanderbilt was right and that Sopwith went home, posed as a martyr, said nothing of the "breaks" the race committee gave him and consoled himself by strutting about his native docks and crying that anyway he was a true "British sportsman."

Rockne System Faced With New Test

Used by Alabama, It Will Oppose Warner Style, Used by Stanford.

By Robert Edgren.

THE Rose Bowl game has some interesting angles.

Critics of the Notre Dame system, after Rockne's death, sang a requiem for the system and were prepared to bury it. But Alabama, one of the Rose Bowl contestants, undefeated and untied, plays the Notre Dame system.

After "Pop" Warner's Stanford teams had lost a number of games to the Southern California boys coached by Howard Jones, football experts began to look upon the Warner system as a failure. Stanford, the other team playing in the Rose Bowl, plays the Warner system. Stanford is undefeated, but tied.

Perhaps the "experts" who were going to inter the two famous methods of play were a little previous.

Must Be Great Team.

Another angle on the game is that the team representing Alabama this year is said to be the greatest team the university has ever had. And, considering that Alabama has played in the bowl three times without a loss, you can understand that this must be some team.

Strangely enough, Stanford also is represented by the best team in its history, and it has put some pretty good ones on the field, too. Stanford's Rose Bowl record shows one win one tie and two losses. The best you can say about the losses is that the Indians presented an unusual amount of fire and fight on the losing side and the winners must have known they had won something after the battle was over. There are some teams which were snowed under in Rose Bowl engagements, but Stanford is not one of them. Rained under, maybe, but never snowed under.

California has taken considerable pride in the Stanford team, and in the fact that four members of the Indian team were All-Pacific Coast first-team men, while five more were All-Coast second-team choices. That's a good record—9 out of 11 men on honor teams.

None From California.

The startling part of this is that not one of the four men chosen on the first All-Coast team was from California. Moscrip, an All-American and candidate, is from Adena, Ohio. Hamilton, a half back, is from Sewickley, Pa. Grayson, a full back and another All-American candidate, is from Oregon. Reynolds, tackle, comes from Oklahoma.

This sounds like efficient work on the part of Alumni. As your correspondent has heard the story, Moscrip, Hamilton and Reynolds all went to Kiski Prep, in Pennsylvania, an institution from which Columbia and Princeton have drawn several star players recently. Reynolds' father was a Stanford man, and when Reynolds went West he persuaded his two pals to come along. It was a great break for the Western institution to pick up a couple of real ball players from the other side of the country, who made the All-Coast eleven in their sophomore and junior years and certainly should do it again.

Indiana Beats G. W. Five, 45-41

fouls, and Bob Etnire, substituting for Kehrt, sank another pot shot to give Indiana 41 points and what proved to be the ball game.

Jim Howell and Ben Goldfadden sank two double-deckers for G. W., with Gunning slipping one in for Indiana between as G. W. attempted to close the gap between the two. Tuffy Leemans' anxiety to score led to a long shot from midcourt and one of the evening's queerest plays.

Fechtman, standing under the G. W. basket, jumped and rammed his hand up through the hoop, knocking the shot back up and out of the bucket. Referee Degnan called a technical foul and Howell made it good.

Howell sank two additional free throws immediately after for G. W.'s final points.

Textile Mill Activity Is Lower During 1934

New York, Dec. 21 (AP).—Textile mill activity in the first ten months of 1934 was 19 per cent below that in the same period last year, and 15 per cent lower than the average in the first nine months of the years 1924-31, according to a survey made by the Textile World.

November activity was estimated at 10 per cent ahead of the same month in 1933.

Iron Ore Now on Hand Is Lower on Dec. 1

Cleveland, Dec. 21 (AP).—Iron ore on hand at furnaces and at Lake Erie docks amounted to 35,873,660 tons on December 1, the Lake Superior Iron Ore Association reported.

A year ago the total was 36,199,710 tons. Of the December 1, 1934, total, 30,625,105 had been delivered to the furnaces.

Death Calms Plea of Jackson Fight Judge

By Edward J. Neil.
Associated Press Sports Writer.

NEW YORK, Dec. 21 (AP).—Danny Ridge, the little fellow who followed orders in the fight game as he did in France, was buried today in Mt. Zion cemetery, and the book on his part of the young Peter Jackson-Sammy Fuller Fiasco is closed forever.

Ridge was one of the two judges—Harold Barnes was the other—who followed the rules of the New York State Athletic Commission and awarded a ten-round decision to Jackson in Madison Square Garden several weeks ago, although their opinions, like those of everyone else in the place, were that Fuller, who scored three knockdowns, had won.

A few days later the boxing commission suspended him indefinitely, along with Barnes. Danny went to the commission, to state his side of the case. All the newspapermen were there.

"I'm going into the Veterans' Hospital for a serious operation," he said. "Before I go I want you to reinstate me. People will think I'm a crook, that I did something dishonest. I did only what I felt I had to do under the rules you laid down.

"I may not come back from the hospital. If I've done no wrong, I want my name cleared, now."

He was almost in tears, he was so earnest about it. Commissioners John J. Phelan and Bill Brown explained tactfully that a mistake, a grave mistake, had been made, that someone must be punished. His integrity, honesty, never had been questioned.

So Ridge had to be satisfied with that. He went to the Veterans' hospital and underwent the operation. He had been gassed in the Argonne when he lay in a ditch after a shell wrecked the ammunition truck he was driving. A splinter of the shell also wrecked his face. His nose had to be rebuilt.

Danny didn't come out of the hospital to face the commission again. He died on the operating table yesterday, just as Harry Greb and Tiger Flowers died.

He was 39 years old, and his real name was Daniel Rosenblatt; before the war he was a top notch lightweight. He fought Benny Leonard, Freddie Welsh, Knockout Brown and Willie Beecher, among others. He tried to fight after the war, but mustard gas burns in his throat and lungs forced him to give up after two tries. He has been an active judge and referee ever since.

At his burial today were Leach Cross, another of his old antagonists, some of his fellow judges and referees—Barnes, Jed Gahan, Eddie Forbes and Abe Goldberg. Congressman Samuel Dickstein was there, and Alderman Murray Stand.

Phelan, Brown and D. Walker Wear, the State commissioners, could not make it. They planned to reinstate Danny at their next meeting, though.

Stocks Capture Fractional Rise In Dull Trading

New York, Dec. 21 (AP).—Speculation moved sluggishly in a preholiday atmosphere in Wall street today, prolonging the drifting course of the stock market.

Sentiment improved a bit in speculative quarters as rallying tendencies appeared in some of the utility shares under pressure earlier in the week. The list generally had a better tone, but final prices were mixed and, on the average, little changed.

Week-end statistics furnished additional evidence of an uptrend in business, including a gain in railroad carloadings which was better than seasonal. Otherwise, there was nothing in the news to stir traders into action. The permanent registration regulations announced by the Securities and Exchange Commission appeared to have no immediate significance for security markets.

Nibble at Stocks.

Dwindling liquidation in power shares and other groups encouraged traders to nibble at stocks on the chances of a rally. But buying of that character was not aggressive in face of the usual disposition to move cautiously before holidays.

The spot silver price in New York dropped seven-eighths cents an ounce to 53¼. But the effect on silver shares was offset by a favorable earnings estimate of U. S. Smelting and announcement of a $3 dividend on its common compared with $2 paid in October.

U. S. Smelting spurted 3 points. Howe Sound and Cerro de Pasco got up about a point each.

Power Plant Discussion.

Consolidated Gas settled into a narrow range, closing unchanged at 20. American Telephone and Public Service of New Jersey sagged nearly a point. But United Corporation preferred, North American and North American Edison preferred improved.

Oil and liquor shares attracted buying. Standard Oil of New Jersey, Seaboard Oil, National Distillers and U. S. Industrial Alcohol rose a point or more. Gains of a point or so also were recorded in American Can, Chesapeake Corporation, Commercial Credit, Eastman Kodak and Ingersoll Rand.

Total Sales.

The Standard Statistics Co. average for 90 stocks advanced two-tenths of a point to 71.8. Turnover in the Stock Exchange totaled 915,820 shares against 875,275. A moderate amount of yearend selling for tax purposes helped to expand the turnover, brokers said.

Although carloadings showed an increase of 20,516 compared with a year ago, rail shares on the average were stationary. The increase made the total 579,935, a rise of 28,924 from the preceding week. Coal contributed most of the increase.

Christmas trade, in a final spurt before the holidays, continues to outdo expectations, according to Dun & Bradstreet's weekly review. It estimated retail sales this month had run 20 to 30 per cent ahead of last year in most sections.

Business observers pointed out, however, that retail trade would reach its year-end climax this week and that industry and trade probably would enter a quieter period over the next two or three weeks.

Expenditures of Oil Industry for 1935 Will Aid Recovery

Tulsa, Okla., Dec. 21 (AP).—Expenditures of the oil industry in the United States in 1935 for equipment, leaseholds, royalties, labor and taxes were estimated by the Oil and Gas Journal at $4,561,669,000 after a nation-wide survey of New Year budgets.

The expenditures were distributed as follows: Purchases of material from other industries, $1,312,000,000; leases, bonuses and royalties, $201,845,000; pay roll, $2,043,000,000; and taxes to Federal, State and municipal governments, $1,004,824,000.

An expected expenditure of $374,000,000 will go to railroads alone for transportation of crude oil, by-products, supplies and equipment, an amount equal to 11 per cent of all rail car-lot business, the survey showed.

The Journal says:

"While these vast expenditures make the petroleum industry the most potent factor in the national business recovery program and the biggest single customer of many other lines of business, with resultant maintenance of employment and pay rolls in other industries, stockholders of the petroleum industry benefit least of all.

"Earnings of companies in the oil industry during the past 13 years have averaged only 1.66 per cent of the investment, and the total earnings for these 13 years are only twice as much as the industry's tax bill for one year, 1933."

Since September, 1933, the survey continues, the oil industry has added 300,000 persons to its pay rolls.

Interest to Be Paid.

Cleveland, Dec. 21 (AP).—Directors of the Denver & Rio Grande Western Railroad have authorized the road's officers to pay $861,600 in interest, due October 1, before the 90-day grace period expires December 31.

So-called Working Capital or Slow Loans Cited as Most Important Issue Today in Available Bank Credit Problem.

By Special Writer of The Post.

In their report on the availability of bank credit in the Seventh Federal Reserve District, Charles C. Hardy and Jacob Viner state that "by far the most important issues which arises in this connection has to do with the so-called working capital or slow loans." As the investigators point out, the orthodox theory which assumes that banks should make only self-liquidating loans is based upon a conception of banking that is alien to this country. American banks never have limited their operations to commercial banking as strictly defined, but have been accustomed to finance purchases of equipment and supply part of the permanent working capital of business. When a system of this sort has been long established, it can not be suddenly reformed to eliminate long-term credit transactions without serious disturbances to business.

As a matter of fact, complaints of a lack of working capital have been greatly exaggerated, judging from the limited volume of applications. Nevertheless, a good deal of evidence is presented to show that some banks have inflicted serious hardships upon solvent concerns by suddenly refusing to make working capital loans and by demanding repayment of outstanding advances. The difficulties of the banking community during the depression years have been greatly enhanced because of their practice of making slow loans, or loans that customers expected to have renewed time and time again. It would, no doubt, have been better to have had separate institutions concerned with providing intermediate and long-term credits for small business concerns unable to obtain capital by selling their securities in the open market.

Reversal of Loan Practice Leaves Gap in Credit System.

However, in view of the fact that so-called commercial banks have been the chief sources of long time loans of the type mentioned, a sudden reversal of policy leaves a gap in the credit structure that has to be filled in some fashion. In short our banks have endeavored to reform their lending policies without waiting for a reorganization of the banking structure that would allow adequate provision to be made for the types of loans that they wish to exclude. The situation reveals the unrealistic method of approach to banking reform problems which has been characteristic of this country.

Instead of recognizing the fact that our unit banks are not and never have been strictly commercial banking institutions, banking experts have criticized them harshly for engaging in long term operations not suited to commercial banks. Then, too, undue importance has been assigned to the superior liquidity of loans which run for a short time. A great many short term loans are, in fact, long term loans in disguise. Moreover an attempt to bring about a general and pronounced liquidation of short term loans would be as difficult as an effort to liquidate at any one time a large proportion of long term investments. The chief danger from loans of a non-commercial type grows out of the fact that credit expansion may be encouraged without reference to the volume of current business. That kind of expansion has an inflationary effect upon price levels, and creates serious trouble for banks whose deposits are payable on demand in subsequent periods of deflation.

Intermediate Loans Urged Instead of Investment Type.

For that reason it seems desirable to make special provision for intermediate loans instead of urging the banks to increase their slow loans of a semi-investment or investment type. In that case the Federal Reserve banks might properly disavow responsibility for making any provision, either directly or through rediscounts, for furnishing industries with working capital. Unless and until special intermediate credit institutions are established, however, there is some warrant for demanding that the Reserve banks, which serve hybrid member bank organizations, shall recognize an obligation to supply various types of credit.

As a matter of fact, the Reserve banks were handicapped at the start by being regarded as the apex of a commercial banking system which existed only in the minds of the framers of the act. Consequently, the system has never been able to give adequate service to member banks whose assets represent long-term and medium, as well as short-term commercial advances. The situation may be far from ideal, but it is an actuality and ought to have been dealt with in realistic fashion.

Bonds Decline Two-Tenths in Smaller Sales

Utilities Show Stability as Trading Drops to $10,382,000.

New York, Dec. 21 (AP).—The bond list as a whole continued to drift lower in today's trading. Fractional declines were the rule, and the Standard Statistics Co. price average of 60 corporates issues settled back .2 of a point of 85.5.

New York utilities showed a little more stability after the weakness of recent sessions. Two of three consolidated gas issues traded showed minor gains, with the 5½s advancing to 104¼. Brooklyn Edison 5s were a little better at 110¼, but some of the New York Edison bonds were soft. New York Steam 6s lost several points at 102.

The rails, particularly the speculative obligations, gave ground in most cases. Central of Georgia 5s at 19½, Chicago & Eastern Illinois 6s at 75, Monon 5s at 21¾, and Denver & Rio Grande Western 5s all lost a point or more. Better grade railroads showed minor losses or held about even.

Traction issues were a weak spot. Interborough issues lost up to 2 points, with the Interboro 6s down to 65½. Market St. Railway 7s lost some 6 points to 64½. Brooklyn-Manhattan bonds were steady.

United States Governments were irregular in a quiet market. Treasury 4¼s gained moderately to 113 2-32ds, while the 3⅜s declined about the same amount to 104 11-32. Foreign bonds were better for the most part with some gains of three to five points, as in Vienna City 6s at 99½, and Silesia Bank 6s at 51¼.

Sales amounted to $10,382,000 par value, substantially under yesterday's turnover.

Curb Trading Is Featureless; Volume Drops

Oils Stage Improvement; Transfers Decline to 214,000 Shares.

Utilities were somewhat steadier than in recent sessions. Oils and alcohols ruled narrowly changed, while specialty issues were mixed.

Directors of Swift & Co. declared a special dividend of 25 cents in addition to the regular quarter distribution, but the news came too late to have any influnece on the stock, which closed about unchanged. Aluminum Co. of America, Creole Petroleum, Distillers Corporation-Seagrams, Lake Shore, Hiram Walker, Pioneer Gold and American Cyanamid B all finished steady.

Bunker Hill & Sullivan, Gulf Oil, International Petroleum and Montgomery Ward "A," ended about a point higher each, while similar recessions were recorded by Sherwin Williams, Carrier Corporation, Fisk Rubber (new) and Parker Rust Proof.

Wheat Values Pushed Higher Under Buying

Cotton Prices Advance 2 to 9 Points in Active Sales.

Chicago, Dec. 21 (AP).—Enlarged speculative buying that developed late today both in wheat and corn more than overcame early downturns to bottom prices unmatched since November 23.

Increase of purchase power was based more or less on the fact that wheat and corn values had fallen about 8 cents a bushel from their recent high point. Buyers appeared impressed also with assertions that in view of dearth of moisture in spring wheat areas the 1935 aggregate domestic crop of all wheat might turn out below normal needs.

Wheat closed firm ¼ to ½ above yesterday's finish; May, 98½@98⅝; corn, ⅛ off to ⅜ up; May, 86½@86¾; oats, ⅛ to ½ down, and provisions unchanged to a rise of 10 cents.

Mills as well as speculators became buyers of wheat on early dips in prices. The dips resulted chiefly from a bearish construction that most traders placed at first on the United States Government's latest crop report. Notable weakness of wheat quotations at Liverpool was also a bearish factor, and was ascribed partly to untoward aspects of official estimates of the new Argentine wheat crop.

Cotton Market

New York, Dec. 21 (AP).—Cotton was a little more active today, but prices continued to hold within a narrow range, closing very steady at net advances of 2 to 9 points.

Reports of a continued good business in the primary cloth markets and indications that supplies of competing grades of foreign cottons abroad were becoming scarcer, brought in some buying orders in the early trading.

Reports that the market had encountered some selling in New Orleans against producers' pool cotton or certificates, were accompanied by some New Orleans selling here which checked the advance near the close.

While there were indications of a little more commission house interest, much of the day's business was attributed to evening up of January in preparation for notices next week. There was considerable switching from January to later deliveries.

Exports today, 32,697, making 2,375,540 so far this season. Port receipts, 41,432. United States port stocks, 3,086,736.

Cottonseed Oil.

Bleachable cottonseed oil was unsettled in the early trading today by increased liquidation in May, which declined 12 points, but the bullish pig survey report of the Department of Agriculture led to active buying and prices rallied sharply with the market closing strong at 12 to 20 points net advance. Sales were 143 contracts, including 64 in exchanges. Bleachable spot nominal; December closed 10.10, January, 10.19; March, 10.14; May, 10.22; July, 10.32.

Trustee Board Authorizes Library Room; Delays Tucker Hall Vote.

Lexington, Dec. 21 (AP).—"Necessary expenditures" to provide a library and classroom space for the Washington and Lee law school after the Christmas holidays were authorized by the executive committee of the board of trustees here today.

The committee took no actual steps toward construction of a building to replace Tucker Hall, destroyed by fire last Sunday morning, but called a full meeting of the board for the first week in January for this purpose.

University officials said they were assured a new law building would be placed on the site of the burned structure, but details as to architectural design and arrangement will be left for decision by the board of trustees. Only gray stone walls remain of Tucker Hall, destruction of which represented an $85,000 loss.

Today's meeting of the executive committee was held at the home of President Francis P. Gaines, who is recovering from a severe illness, but still is confined to his home.

THE BUNGLE FAMILY — Santa Claus — By Harry J. Tuthill

GEORGE REJECTED A SURPRISING OPPORTUNITY TO DOUBLE IN ROMANCE FOR HIS MILLIONAIRE EMPLOYER, BUT ON THE WAY HOME DAVENPORT BUNNIE'S SUBSTITUTE DECIDED TO PAY HIMSELF OVERTIME FOR AN OCCUPATIONAL HAZARD.
REG. U.S. PAT. OFF. 12-22
TELL ME! THE MORE I THINK OF THAT COUNTESS FLAMINGO THROWING HER CHUBBY ARMS AROUND MY NECK AND GETTING ME ALL SMOKED UP WITH FACE POWDER.
ALSO BELTING ME ON THE HEAD WITH THAT CLASSY HANDBAG.
I AGREED TO HANDLE BUNNIE'S BUSINESS AFFAIRS, NOT TO BE A SORT OF DUMMY TROUBLE-SHOOTER IN HIS DIZZY ROMANCES.
FOR TWO CENTS I'D RAISE MY SALARY.
HE CAN AFFORD TO PAY ME A WHOLE LOT EASIER THAN I CAN AFFORD TO GO HOME AND EXPLAIN BLONDE HAIRS ON MY COAT.
I'VE GOT A GOOD MIND TO UP MY PAY A FLAT $25.
I OUGHT TO CHARGE HIM ANOTHER $25 FOR LETTING ME WALK INTO THIS HOT-CHA ANGLE WITHOUT BEING WARNED.
YES SIR, A $50 RAISE. TAKE IT OR LEAVE IT, MR. BUNNIE.
ALSO I'D BETTER TAKE A ROUNDABOUT WAY HOME SO ALL OF THAT PASH PERFUME BLOWS OFF OF ME OR WHAT I'LL GET FOR CHRISTMAS IS THE THIRD DEGREE.

YOU'RE RIGHT, MISS TESS. TRACY WON'T FAIL US. HE HASN'T EVER LET US DOWN YET, HAS HE!

Walt Mason, Himself

Browning.

Does anyone read Browning these sad and mournful days? Is any person downing his strange and subtle phrase? Do people get excited and form a Browning Club, to which gents are invited, the scholar and the scrub? I recollect the season when Browning was the fad, the priest of rhyme and reason, whose verses made men glad. His books were widely scattered in mansion, hut and shed, and nothing really mattered till Browning had been read. A man had little standing in any social sphere unless he could be handing out Browning by the year. And women read his pages and tried to get the sense, till in despairing rages they leaned against the fence. 'Twas Browning in the morning, and Browning in the night, and people were a-scorning all other bards in sight. And in the school the teacher talked Browning to the kids, and in the church the preacher from Browning pried the lids; and in his shop the baker pulled Browning rhymes apart, and asked the undertaker if Browning cheered his heart. The epidemic lasted for quite a little time, until its course was blasted by other brands of rhyme. And now my friend is frowning, when mildly I inquire, "What do you think of Browning, whom men did once admire?" His blue-veined eyelid flutters, he shifts his seated frame, and thoughtfully he mutters, "Somewhere I've heard the name."

T. L. Costigan Named to Head Refuse Branch

The District commissioners yesterday named a new supervisor of city refuse, selecting Thomas L. Costigan, who has been superintendent of street cleaning since 1918.

Costigan succeeds Morris Hacker, who was retired November 1, and with whom he helped organize the city refuse department in August, 1918. He will take office January 1.

Costigan is 61 years old. He was born in Philadelphia, and came to Washington in 1887. He entered the District service temporarily in 1908, and then again in 1909 as an assistant building inspector. Since that time, he has been constantly in the District employ.

A member of the Washington Society of Engineers, he also completed a one-year term as president of the International Association of Public Works Officers in September. With his wife, Mrs. Eva Costigan, he lives at 1707 Columbia road northwest.

The appointment leaves the commissioners with two important offices still to be filled—that of District health officer and that of superintendent of penal institutions.

Pre-Christmas ProvesPleasing

Blind News Venders in Government Plants to Get Added Privileges.

A pre-Christmas present brought happiness to two blind men last night. It was a typewritten letter from Aron B. Cammerer, director of the National Park Service, and it allowed them to sell magazines, candy, chewing gum and tobacco.

So, today, it will be business as usual for sightless William Henry Boyer at his three tables in the basement of the massive State, War and Navy Building and for William D. Phillips, whose counters are in the hulking brick building of the General Accounting Office.

The letter amended the original permit of March 10, which had authorized the Columbia Polytechnic Institute for the Blind to have Boyer and Phillips sell only newspapers. With the passing months, the two men had broadened their business and last Wednesday they were suddenly notified that the permit permitted only the sale of the newspapers. Friendly Government employes immediately protested, and the extension of the permit followed.

"It was only a matter of control," Cammerer observed last night. Institute officials celebrated with thanks to everybody in sight.

Dependents of CCC Given $113,000,000

Robert E. Fechner, director of Emergency Conservation Work, said last night that approximately $113,000,000 has gone into the homes of Civilian Conservation Corps workers since the program was started in May, 1933, according to the Associated Press.

Fechner, sending greetings to the CCC workers over an NBC radio network, said the total cost of the program was $474,500,000, of which the workers received $143,000,000, the bulk of it going to their dependents.

The Federal Diary

(Trade-Mark Applied For.)

By Morgan Baker.

IT'S an axiom at Patent Office that resignations of examiners are proportionate with prosperity in industrial and scientific fields—the more industry becomes active, the higher salaries it can offer, hence more Federal experts are drawn into private firms.

BAKER.

Going to "greener pastures" this month are:

Paul M. Geist, junior examiner, appointed from Pittsburgh, November 30, 1929. Mr. Geist is joining the patent department of the Textile Machine Works, Reading, Pa.

Kenneth E. Mulford, junior examiner, appointed June 2, 1930. Mr. Mulford is joining the legal department of the Atlas Powder Co., Wilmington, Del.

George L. Wallace (F), junior examiner, appointed December 16, 1930. Mr. Wallace is joining the patent department of the Aluminum Co. of America, New Kensington, Pa. He is a graduate of the U. S. Naval Academy and holds an L. B. degree from George Washington University.

Warren Seaton, assistant examiner, appointed from Iowa June 25, 1928. He is joining the legal department of the E. I. du Pont de Nemours & Co., Wilmington, Del.

Trueman L. Styner, assistant examiner, appointed July 5, 1928. Mr. Styner is joining the patent department of the R. C. A. Radiotron Co.

After a serious illness of two months, R. D. Andrews (C), auditor, Home Owners Loan Corporation, is back at his desk with a report of "complete recovery."

CONSIDERING the fact that the law provides 15 days' sick leave for all civil officers and employes, it seems that John B. Payne, comptroller, Agricultural Adjustment Administration, is about to set a precedent, employe leaders point out. Mr. Payne has just issued an order warning his staff that furloughs will be effected soon and that absence from work on account of sick leave will be a factor in forcing the employes to take furloughs.

G. W. Friedhoff Appointed.

Appointment of George W. Friedhoff, of Reno, as State director for Nevada is announced by the Federal Housing Administration. Mr. Friedhoff, a native of Denver, has been in the contracting and building business for more than 30 years. For the past year he has been State manager for the Home Owners Loan Corporation.

A. LaVerne Lintner (F), head of the Insurance Division, HOLC, is en route to his home in Topeka, Kans., for the holidays. While there he will marry Miss Frances Brown, a graduate of the University of Kansas, and their wedding trip will be the return to Washington.

ORGANIZATION of Local Union, No. 515, at Des Moines, Iowa, is announced by Secretary-Treasurer Gertrude McNally, of the National Federation of Federal Employes. Miss McNally points out that this is but one phase of the Nation-wide organization and membership development campaign being carried on by the N. F. F. E.

Especial interest attaches to the establishment of several new locals of N. F. F. E. in the Tennessee Valley, where one of the most extensive of all the New Deal projects is under way. Among N. F. F. E. national headquarters representatives who have been in that territory recently are Luther C. Steward, president; Miss Matilda Lindsay, and Earl R. Hoage, national organizers.

Employes of Adjutant and Inspector's Department, Marine Corps Headquarters, will hold their annual Christmas party at noon today in the office of the major general commandant.

Tax on 'Near Beer' In Dry States Aired

Atlanta Cafe Owner Fights Federal Levy.

Justice Jennings Bailey, in the District Supreme Court, yesterday took under advisement a dispute as to the legality of the $1,000 Federal tax imposed on "near beer" dealers in dry States.

The question was brought to his attention by a suit instituted by H. A. Emery, a cafe proprietor of Atlanta, Ga., who installed 3.2 beer in his place and who has been called upon to pay a county, State and Federal tax, even though the State is dry. Emery contended that his beer business was so small he couldn't profitably operate with the Federal tax added.

Emery's attorneys charged the law which produced the tax was unconstitutional in that it applied only to Georgia and Alabama and was therefore not "uniform."

F Street Fire Loss $75,000; 2 Recovering

Pair Hurt While Fighting Jewelry Store Five-Alarm Blaze.

The five-alarm fire which injured two firemen and endangered the large Christmas stock of jewelry at the R. Harris Co., jewelers, early yesterday, did approximately $75,000 damage, police estimated last night.

Meanwhile two firemen hurt in fighting the blaze, which was the first five-alarm fire in the downtown shopping district in almost six years, were recovering.

Fire Lieut. Fred Litteral, of No. 3 Engine Company, was recuperating in Emergency Hospital, where he was taken after two arteries in his left wrist were slashed by flying glass from a shattered window.

Fire Private Robert MacNeely, of No. 2 Engine Company, was recovering from injuries suffered when he was pinned against a wall in the cellar by a powerful stream of water playing from a fire hose.

Officials of the company were unable to say yesterday whether all their losses had been covered by insurance.

Santa's Coming 'Wholesale' To Junior Order Orphanage

Tiffin, Ohio, Dec. 21 (AP).—You mothers and fathers who think you are busy getting ready for Christmas for just one family—imagine the excitement of the holiday season in one of the world's largest orphanages.

"It's a three-ring circus," says Charles H. Kernan who, as superintendent of the national orphanage here of the Junior Order of United American Mechanics, has to make holiday plans for 1,102 children.

Christmas at the Tiffin orphanage embodies such items as 10 barrels of potatoes, all to be peeled, cooked and mashed, 256 chickens to be plucked, stuffed and roasted, 275 mince pies, hundreds of loaves of bread and pounds of butter, and unestimated gallons of milk, cocoa and coffee.

It means a dozen or more Christmas trees, one for each dormitory, and all to be decorated, and 2,206 presents to be selected and wrapped for the youngsters. Each child, before Christmas, writes Santa Claus, or "Papa" Kernan, what he wants, and the superintendent helps pick two presents from each list.

Christmas at the orphanage is more than just one day. The holiday program begins the 24th with a theater party for some of the older children. Then Santa Claus visits the dormitories on Christmas eve. The big dinner comes the following afternoon. There's a series of dormitory parties on the 26th, and amateur theatricals and a concert on the 27th.

'Kringle's Reindeer' Is Only a Passing Elk

Adults, however, found a more prosaic explanation. An elk wandered into town during the night, broke branches from the lower part of the tree and bedded himself down. His antlers were draped with tinsel and a string of popcorn festooned one ear. The animal was shooed away.

League of Nations Army Stages Parade in Saar

Saarbruecken, the Saar, Dec. 21 (AP).—While 10,000 persons watched in deep silence, the League of Nations army staged its first parade here today.

A battalioin of Italian grenadiers, smart in olive drab uniforms with red facing, marched through the city, its band playing martial tunes. The thud of the soldiers' boots and the music were the only sounds, however. The few words spoken among the crowd were in whispers.

3-Day Holiday Hopes Dashed

President Announces Present Order for Half-Mondays Will Stand.

Whatever hope Government employes may have held for a three-day Christmas holiday was dashed by President Roosevelt yesterday when he declared that present order for a half-day off Christmas Eve will stand.

Many departments of the Government can not be closed for so long a period, the President said at his press conference. He added that the problem of differentiating between offices, deciding which should close, was too difficult.

Employes in the District had been hopeful that they would be allowed a full day off Christmas Eve in return for working all day New Year's Eve. But under the present arrangement, they will work half a day both Mondays.

Only exceptions to the rule, the President commented, will be workers in the Navy Yard and other industrial branches of the Government. In these cases, he said, it is not feasible to work only four hours.
